Frank DuPre Will Throw Self on Mercy of Court

Allen and Foster Will Wage Stubborn Fight for Life Sentence, They Announce Saturday.

SOLICITOR TO URGE THE DEATH PENALTY

Maudlin Sentimentality in This Case Will Be Direct Blow at Society, Boykin Says.

Frank B. DuPre, the Peachtree bandit, confessed slayer of Irby C. Walker, Pinkerton detective, will face trial for his life Tuesday with only his youth set up as a bulwark between himself and the sternest penalty of

This was made known Saturday by Louis Foster, of his counsel. When asked what would be the line of defense, Mr. Foster frankly admitted that there would be no defense.

"We can only ask and hope for mercy," said he. "Our client has admitted the slaying. He has admitted not only the Kaiser robbery, but every other crime he has committed during his brief career as a criminal. His deed was a black one and anything that we have to offer will only be Hope for Mercy.

"However, we believe that he is en titled to a recommendation of mercy from the jury. We believe that we can make such a showing that he will get one. Our contention is that he used his pistol on a wild impulse, engendered by whisky and by fright. We contend that the very fact that he did so will prove his youthful ignorance and inexperience in crime. We can show that he was prompted by older heads, who balked at the risk

"We are not going to plead insanity, just woeful ignorance, bad environment, unthinking boy impulsiveness. There never has been a Georgia jury that would hang women and children, and we'll show that DuPre in mind and in years and in experience is not much more than a child. That's Says Nerve Is Gone.

We believe, however, that if he is sentenced to life imprisonment the ends of justice will not suffer. Du-Pre, sent to prison, will be closely watched and guarded the rest of his life. If he were not, he has received a fright that has completely broken his nerve. He would break his neck before he would think of making' a break to escape.

'He can never expect any clemency from a governor of Georgia. The people who are interested in him, his father and his relatives, know that this can never be expected. Under these conditions we believe that life imprisonment will be sufficient punishment for almost any crime. In view of this showing, we think we are entitled to ask for mercy. And that is all that

In the meantime, Solicitor-General John A. Boykin is preparing his case with a view of demanding the death enalty. His contention is that any audlin sentimentality that will prevent DuPre's suffering on the gallows will be a blow to society in general in criminals to go to any extent as long as they are protected by boyish ap-

Counties Should Pay Maintenance Cost of Patients. Says Expert. Overcrowded Conditions

Sweeping changes in the laws providing for commitment of the insane and administration of affairs at the state sanitarium for the insane should be passed by the next legislature, and quick steps to relieve crowded conditions and bring about improvement in handling of insane people should be taken, according to recommendations submitted to Governor Thomas W. Hardwick by Dr. Richard H. Hutchings, former Georgian, but now noted alienist of New York. The recommendations are based on a survey of conditions surrounding the care of the insane made last November by Dr. Hutchings for the national committee for mental hygiene.

Dr. Hutchings recommends creation of a state department of mental hy giene, a change in the system of main taining patients at the state hospital which would provide that expenses of patients be borne by counties instead of by the state, and that, in case patients have relatives able to pay maintenance expenses, such relatives be required to pay all or part of such expenses. He recommends erection of a psychopathic hospital to be built in Atlanta, this hospital to contain 100 beds and to serve as a clearing house for patients from north Georgia.

In the report Dr. Hutchings que tions the propriety of admitting to the hospital criminals who are not insane, patients with congenital mental defects and aged and feeble patients whose disorders consist of nothing more than impairment of memory and childishness. He recommends that criminals who are not insane be sent to the state penitentiary if the term for which they are sentenced has not expired and that they be released if the term has expired. Dr. Hutchings' report covers four een typewritten pages, and in it he iscusses all phases of management of the sanitarium and suggests changes in the system which he declares wil bring about substantial improvement

It was a day of great uncertainty in Home, and deep anxiety among those who watched and prayed at the saftcan, for virtually hopes of the pope's pecovery were abandoned, even in the early hours of the morning.

As the hours passed, the wonder rew at the recuperative powers of the holy father, which enabled him to pass from one sinking spell and another to periods of comparative restfulness and strength. It was this changing condition that inspired hope at one moment and gave rise to rumors of death at another.

It was thought that if the pope passed safely through the night, he would have a chance of life after the dawn, and so it proved. In the early part of the day sleep came and seemed to add to his powers of resistance.

And yet, later in the evening more hopeful word was received from the pope's bedside, and on each occasion the spirits of those in the vatican were relatively raised, notwithstanding Dr. Battistini's continuous admonition that the pontiff's condition was "most grave."

An all-night vigil which the Associated Press correspondent kept in the ante chamber of the pope's private apartment brought evidence that the pope lung to life only by a slender thread. He passed an extremely restless sight, suffering as he was from extreme congestion of both lungs and from the intense agony caused by shallow and rapid respiration. When Dr. Battistini visited his holiness in the very early hours of Saturday morning the patient rallied somewhat, and was able to exchange a few words with those in attendance.

When Battistini said to the pope:

Benedict XV. always showed a great desire for the closest relations with America and left nothing unattempted to show his sympathy in anything affecting the United States. This was shown especially on the occasion of the sinking of the Lusitania, when the pope, notwithstanding his strict neutrality in the war—he preferred to call it "impartiality"—telegraphed to the kaiser his abhorrence of the action which had shocked the civilized world. The pope always regarded the United States as a country which would play an important part in bringing about the pacification of Europe, and through Monsignor Bonzano, the apostolic delegate in Washington, he sent on several occasions during the recent war, messages to President Wilson explaining the feeling that America might assist in conciliating the belligerent countries.

In the speculation as to who will be the successor of Benedict, the most prominently mentioned is the secretary of state, Cardinal Gasparri, whose election would represent an indorsement of the policy by him and by Benedict in the last seven years during the grave period of the world war. Cardinal Gasparri, who has also the position of chamberlain of the church, is intrusted with the direction of the holy see during the interregnum from the death of the pope to the election of his successor.

The election of Cardinal de Lai would justify the desire of the sacred college to have again, as under Pius X., a pope above all religious, that is, who would not play such a prominent part in world politics as Benedict XV. and Leo XIII.

Among the cardinals living in Rome there is another who has a considerable following and whose election would be a new departure, since for several centuries there has not been a foreign pope on the chair of St. Peter's namely Cardinal Merry Del Val, who was secretary of state under Pius X. Cardinal Rambolla, and of Leo XIII. Plus X. died of grief for not having been able to prevent the world war, and Benedict XV. expended such energy in trying to stop or mitigate the conflict that many people, including several American archbishops and bishops, who approached him afterwards, think that the efforts made in this endeavor seriously affected his constitution.

Like Leo XIII. he was most anxious to establish diplomatic relations with all the countries whether Catholic or not, and he succeeded in having at the holy see representatives of the entire world, with the exception of the Scandinavian states in Europe and the United States in the American continent.

While negotiations were proceeding for the establishment of a papal nunclo at Tokio, Benedict XV. failed to have an internuncio appointed at Pekin through the opposition of the French government, who, it is said, feared that a papal representative in China might affect their right of protecting the Catholics in the Far East. France was helped on that occasion, it is said here, by the United States, which objected to the appointment of Monsignor Peperelli as internuncio in China on account of his alleged anti-American feelings as shown while apostolic delegate to the Philippines.

JAILED COMMUNISTS FORBIDDEN CARNIVAL

Berlin, January 21.—The Bavarian government has forbidden the communist prisoners of the Niederschoenfeld jail to hold a carnival which had been planned with the aid of their comrades who are at liberty. The latter had donated 100,000 marks' worth of tobacco, food and candies.

The prisoners were sentenced two years ago for participating in attempts to overthrow the government, and since that time the Bavarian communists have been carrying on propaganda against the "harsh treatment" of the prisoners. Among the prisoners are a number of Germany's most prominent red poets and authors.

A new carburetor which cuts down gasoline consumption of any motor and reduces gasoline bills from one-third to one-half is the proud achievement of the Air-Friction Carburetor Co., 176 Madison St., Dayton, Ohio. This remarkable invention not only increases the power of motors from 30 to 50 per cent, but enables every one to run slow on high gear. It also makes it easy to start a Ford or any other car in the coldest weather. You can use the very cheapest grade of gasoline or half gasoline and failf kerosene and still get more power, and more mileage than you now get from the highest test gasoline. So sure are the manufacturers of the immense saving their new carburetor will make that they offer to send it on 30 days trial to every car owner. Innocent Suffer for Guilty. "Not only the country in which the mob-crime is committed is held the mob-crime is committed is held guilty before this sweeping federal statute, but—worse than all, the innocent people of the innocent counties through which a mob may elect to carry a criminal to the scene of his crime for execution—yea, though the journey be made in the dark hours of the night while the law-abiding inhabitants are peacefully sleeping—those counties, too, are adjudged guilty in the eyes of the nation and of the world. Why, gentlemen, it would be just as sensible and just as just to penalize every innocent citizen in America because this crime is committed on American soil.

South Fighting Upward.

"We are fighting upward in the doyal south, wrestling with prob-lems a hundredfold more difficult than you honest men of other sec-tions can possibly understand. Let Congressman Upshaw spoke in part as follows:

"I am more opposed to lynching than the proponents of this bill—I oppose lynching a numan being and I also oppose lynching the constitution of the United States. Lynching is a horribe crime. It is barbous in spirit and mercliess in execution. Declaring itself a portest against the impotence of law, it endangers a reckless and insidious spirit that ultimately tramples all law and endangers the security of society.

"Because of these facts—facts too patent to admit of discussion, it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to stand aggressively against every phase and form of mob violence. Personally, I have tried to live up to the spirit of my own teaching. The endanger is the security of the spirit of my own teaching. The endanger is the duty of every patriotic citizen to stand aggressively against every phase and form of mob violence. Personally, I have tried to live up to the spirit of my own teaching. The endanger is the duty of every patriotic citizen to stand aggressively against every phase and form of mob violence as law-leas murderers and enemies of community peace and safety. I have petrators of mob violence as law-leas murderers and enemies of community peace and safety. I have presented this course, allow me to say, it is lawless element. "And if you are often themselves a bothed of thought and action in my own section for the majesty of the law. Editors have denounced lynching, the publiciats and patriots everywhere have honestly tried to build up that wholesome respect for all law that will make lynching impossible. "In the face of these outstanding facts, and in face of the constitution provision that police powers are reserved to the states, I must cayress my surprise and disappointment that this bill which proposes to stop lawlessness, invades the series of the family of the victim of the barbar are reserved to the states, I must cayress my surprise and disappointment that this bill which proposes to stop lawlessness, invades the family of the human de guilty and encourage more crime by causing the rapist and the murderer to feel that 'Uncle Sam' is, somehow, taking his part, then go a step further and give another beautiful ten thousand dollars to the family of the victim of the barbarous fiend. To give sympathy to the family of the human devil who is lynched and give neither loyal sympathy nor money to the family of the first and greater sorrow would brand eyery man who votes for this strangely horrible discrimination as guilty of barbarous sympathies and legal and moral blindness.

"God knows I am bitterly opposed to lynching—the masses of my people are opposed to lynching, and are doing their best to prevent it—but, in the name of law and justice, let us not lynch the constitution of the United States and encourage further crime by such an unjust and fruitless remedy."

Jadge Wright's Speech.

Judge Wright's Speech.

Judge Wright spoke, in part, as follows:
"The safety and perpetuity of the government of this republic and of each state of the union depend upon the maintenance and enforceupon the maintenance and enforcement of the laws and the protecti his constitutional and inalienable and inherent right of life, liberty and property and without the protection of these rights confusion and anarchy would inevitably reand anarchy would inevitably result.

"I do not palliate or condone the violation of the law and condemn lynching and mob law in any form. One of its dangers is there is no limit to its jurisdiction. But, I am equally opposed to a violation of the constitution under a guise of the enactment of a law which, if enacted and enforced, would be clearly subversive of the plain terms of the constitution and destructive of our system of government and the constitution and principles upon which it was founded.

"The Ayer anti-lynching bill is not only pernicious and unjust, but is clearly violative of the plain terms and provisions of the constitution and contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions and time-honored traditions.

ample provisions has already been made by the laws of the several states."

Mr. Wright then launched a most

Mr. Wright then launched a most vigorous attack upon the constitutionality of the bill and its absurd and ridiculous terms. In a brief but clear manner he pointed out the sovereign right of the state, showed the county to be only a part of the state, created by the state itself for the purpose of facilitating its governmental functions, and that in order to enforce the provisions of the bill by suit against a county it would take from the state the sovereign power granted it under the constitution of the United States. He then pointed out the many defects of the bill and concluded as follows:

fects of the bill and concluded as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, the general debate upon this bill for the most part has been characterized by dignity, and it has displayed a high order of research and scholarship. It is unfortunate, indeed, that some gentlemen during the debate upon the floor of this house have seen fit to single out Georgia, the Empire State of the South, and make her a target in the dicussion. These attacks are, or should be unworthy of the gentlemen who made them.

the gentleman yield to me for a brief question and statement? Mr. Wright: "Yes." Mr. Tilman: "Touching upon this question as to how Georgia treata her negro citizens, is it not stated in effect in the majority report acres and own property assessed at $41.723,4991"

Mr. Wright: "That is absolutely true. If I had time, I could show you in detail that the colored people of Georgia are properly treated by the white people. Of course now and then there will be a sporadio violation of law. The percentage of crime in Georgia is no more than in any other state of the union. If I were disposed to draw an invidious comparison, which I refrain from doing. I might say that Georgia and the enforcement of her laws, compared to some of the states from which some of these gentlemen who make these attacks come, is a literal paragon. Georgia needs no defenge at my hands, and I say in conclusion that she is inhabited by as grand a people as have ever resisted the advance of tyranny or nourished the spirit of freedom. The achievements of her chivairic, noble and patriotic men and women will live in story and in song when her cowardly slanderers and maligners are forever forgotten."

In committee revision of the resolution, a change also was made in the scope of the publicity pledge by eliminating a provision which many delegates regarded as closing the door against future assertion of government support for any contract not included in the proposed list. In order to strike directly at what they considered the real menace of secret agreements in the Orient, the Chinese presented to the committee the proposed amendment which would have required the listing of every commercial transaction between China or its nationals and the government or nationals of any of the powers. This suggestion, however, was rejected promptly by several delegations, who declared it impossible of enforcement.

In declaring his delegation "not very well pleased," with the resolution, a Chinese spokesman said to-night that the Chinese government probably would not have knowledge of contracts or arrangements made between private corporations or na-tionals of another country with local Tuchuns or nationals in China, and could not make them public. Therefore, the action of the com-mittee, he declared, precluded the possibility that many of the agreements made by "Japanese nationals with re-gard to Manchuria would ever begard to Manchuria would ever be-come known, unless the Japanese gov-ernment forced their publication." He thought it unlikely that the Japanese intended to permit the publication of any engagements of doubtful charac-ter, which he said had been "made extensible without the knowledge of stensibly without the knowledge of

In American quarters, however, it was indicated that several collateral points in connection with China probably would come before the committee Monday. The report of the subcommittee appointed to make a recom mendation regarding the Chinese east-ern railroad is yet to be submitted and American officials apparently expect a committee discussion over the Russian-Chinese alliance, which ex-pired in 1911, but which the Chinese have indicated a desire to bring to the attention of the conference.

Stocking Bank Saves Woman Money When Negro Takes Purse

One-Sided Men

Some men are good producers. They are amibtious. They make good progress. But often they leave little to show for a lifetime of effort. Why?

Frequently because they devote little time and thought to keeping what they accumulate. They invest haphazardly, without due investigation. They die "unexpectedly" without a Will, without a competent Executor or Trustee.

Have YOU been concentrating entirely upon producing? Come in and discuss with our officers practical methods for conserving the rewards of your effort.

A bad heating boiler is just as useless to the human family as a bad egg. No one is wearing medals for making bad eggs good. In the language of Mary the Manicure, "It isn't being done." And if there is ary a gent who can make a bad boiler better, we'd like to put his picture with the wax cross on

The only place for a bad heating boiler, whether it is tin-plate, cast iron or paper mashay, is in the ice house. It doesn't make any difference whether it's there or not. But to put a bad boiler in a real nice flat-that's what Senator Borah or Tom Watson would call "an industrial crime." That's daring your tenants to stay.

You tenants are the actual consumers of heat. It's vital to you to know what kind of boiler is in the basement. Your landlord doesn't care. He doesn't live with you-he lives somewhere else and is probably warm and cosy over a Kewanee all-steel boiler, which is made of boiler-plate, riveted together in one piece at the factory, and won't crack or leak during Arctic nights. E. E. Straus, of Louisville, Ky. David Brown and Miss Rosa Brown, of Albany, are a brother and a sister, and another sister is Mrs. Jake Brown, of Paterson, N. J.

Funeral services will be held at the residence here Monday morning, interment following in Oakview cemetry. Mr. Brown was born in Atlanta 67 years ago but had lived in Albany gives 1885.

Mr. Brown was regarded as the most consistently successful business man in this part of the state, and his enterprises have played a highly important part in the development of Albany. When he was 22 years old he became the business associate of the late D. Greenfield, who moved to Atlanta several years before his death, after selling his interest in the firm to Mr. Brown. The latter organized both the banks of which he was president up to the time of his death, and most of the other concerns with which he was identified.

He was mayor of Albany in 1901 and 1902, but his chief interest and activity in politics was not in the in-terest of himself. He was one of the largest landowners in this section and his ability to keep in intimate touch with all the enterprises with which he was connected was astonishing. He was president of the Kinchafoonee Country club and had been president of the Albany Hebrew congregation for many years.

Personal Efficiency in Work Stressed in Talks by Chief Beavers.

Fifty-three men heretofore carried on police rolls as supernumeraries and elected Friday night by the po-lice board to the force, were formally placed upon the list of regulars Sat-urday and received assignments to regular duty.

As each watch went on duty during the day, Chief of Police Beavers per-sonally appeared before the men and stressed the imperative need for the utmost degree of personal efficiency, warning them that extraordinary diligence in enforcement of the law is the one factor which will abate criminal activities throughout the city, and urging each man to go to work with the expressed determination of making the Atlanta police department 100 per cent efficient.

Chief Beavers emphasized his determination to wage relentless war on termination to wage relentless war on bootleggers, and directed all men to be particularly on the lookout for his type of criminal, characterizing whis-ky dealers and "hip-pocket peddlers" ky dealers and "hip-pocket peddlers" as "one of the most nefarious of the agencies which are deterrent to law enforcement and a growing menace to the society of all communities." "Treat every man the same," the chief cautioned, "whether he be your best friend or your worst enemy; give each and every one a fair deal. Watch poolrooms closely and break up gangs of idlers and loiterers. Responsibility for law enforcement is largely in the hands of each individual patrol-man. Captains and chiefs can do nothing unless each man does his own work well. Each man is but a cog in work well. Each man is but a cog in the machine, and the machine is the police department as a whole. Crim-inals must be detected and crime abated."

Chief Beavers also denounced the type of drinking man known to police as "flask toters," saying that he was potentially as dangerous, if not more so, than a bootlegger himself.

W. E. CARTER SUCCUMBS TO HEART TROUBLE

W. E. Carter, aged 65, of Peachtree Inn, was found dead in his bed at the inn at 11:30 o'clock Saturday morning, by a negro maid. A coroner's jury, which met in the afternoon, found that Mr. Carter had died of heart trouble, or other natural cause. The body was removed to the undertaking establishment of H. M. Patterson & Son, where the inquest was held. Testimony at the inquest pointed to the probability that Mr. Carter had died between 7 and 8 o'clock Frider wight. The body was removed to the under day night.

He is understood to have come to the city from New York. From information available Saturday night, it appeared that Mr. Carter had a number of relatives in New York, but leaves no closely related survivors.

Change in Price of Post Toasties Pleases Housewives, Says Prater

Homer S. Prater, distributor in this territory of Postum Cereal company products, speaking of the change in the retail price of Post Tossties, which became effective the first of which became effective the first of the year, said:

"The housewife likes the conven-ient dime. She has always liked it, and always will. The grocer also likes the dime and the article that likes the dime and the article that sells for a dime, since the 10-cent arti-cle means more business and a quicker turnover. It simplifies his bookkeepturnover. It simplifies his bookkeeping and in the long run saves considerable time in making change.
"Consequently, the Postum Cereal company's new price on Post Toasties, which enables grocers to sell a package at their pre-war price of 10 cents, is very popular.

"During the war when prices for foodstuffs in general were rapidly rising. Post Toasties were the last corn flakes to go up in price. All through the trying period of readjustment last year they held the market steady and now they are the first to come down. Thrifty housewives are proving very responsive to this low-ared price."

GERARD TRITCHLER TO REST IN WEST VIEW

Theodore Gerard Tritchler, prominent young Atlantan, of 26 Virginia circle, who died Friday morning at the Georgia Baptist hospital, will be buried after funeral services at Awtry & Lowndes chapel this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, when fellow members of the Atlanta Athletic club, the Young Men's Bible class of the North Avenue Presbyterian church and other Atlanta organizations with which he was affiliated will pay their last tribute of love and respect.

Mr. Tritchler, though a resident of Atlanta for only four years, had become thoroughly identified with all the city's activities and had a large circle of friends and business associates. He passed away following an operation after an illness that lasted over a long period of years:

He came to Atlanta from Nashville, Tenn., where his father, the late Theodore Tritchler, was a prominent wholesale produce and fruit merchant. In Atlanta he entered his father's business and when his illness came held a position with E. B. Stewart & Co., by whom he was held in the highest esteem.

whom he was held in the highest esteem.

He was regarded as an expert on the Georgia apple crop, and despite his youth—he was only 25 years old—had taken a prominent part in the conventions of the National Apple Shippers' association.

Mr. Tritchler found time, though for activities in both the social and fraternal and religious life of Atlanta. He was an ardent golfer and was a familiar figure on the East Lake Gurse. He was a member of Piedmont lodge of Masons, who will have charge of the services at the grave, and took an active part in the work of the North Avenue Presbyterian church. His associates in the Bible class will sing at the funeral Sunday afternoon, where the Rev. Richard Orme Flinn will conduct the services.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Annie May, Tritchler, lis mother, Mrs. Lillian Tritchler, and two brothers, Cummings and Clifford Tritchler, all of Atlanta.

Interment will be in West View.

Today Is Share With Others Day of Thrift Week

It is especially fitting that the day designated as "Share With Others Day" falls on Sunday. This is a day when the thoughtful individual engages in self analysis; when the responsible citizen from every walk of life plans for increased usefulness Usefulness developed can turn Every Day in the year into "Share With Others Day.

The Big Brother and the Big Sister idea fostered by religious and civic organizations has spread rapidly over our entire Country, and has become an important factor in the affairs of every nation. It is but a realization of the debt owed by those who have hadadvantages to those who have been less fortunate.

Share with others doesn't mean merely sharing your substance, your prosperity; it also means a cordial handchake, a friendly pat on the back, cheery words of encouragement, a bit of human interest.

Thrift practiced systematically means a better type of citizenship. Saving regularly will enable you to measure up to your responsibilities. Don't put off the duty you owe yourself and others. Start today to Save and don't forget that "The Fourth" will pay you to save your money.

New Tax to Aid.

Speaking of the real estate situation, Mr. Reese said:

"For several years the real estate market has been materially held back by the fact that the government would receive in the form of taxes a too great proportion of profits that might accrue from a sale regardless of how long property had been held. A recent development that will mean much in the stimulation in the demand for in the stimulation in the demand for real estate the coming year is the provision of the new income tax law relating to this phase of taxation. Under the new law profits that may be made by a real estate owner after he has held a parcel of property for two years or more will be exempt from taxation during 1922."

It is probably the only big band or or-chestra in the country which is not principally made up of Italians and

"My associates are not content to 'play as it is written' and let it go at that," he said. "They are all ambitious, full of enthusiasm, striving for additional excellence. They know I am never satisfied with anything short of the best, and they will work their heads off to give it to me. There never was such a band before, as I think you will agree when you hear it."

Since the days of the old Cotton States exposition, when John Philip Sousa wrote his famous "King Cotton" or of that visit to Atlanta, there have been many changes in the cele-brated band. There were fifty mu-sicians then, and that was a monster band for those days. There are 100 now, with the addition of a half dozen soloists and many instruments un-known to the bands of those days. The musical taste has changed, too, and Sousa has kept abreast—or a little ahead of it—the Sousa marches, old and new, are still in tremendous de-

Have you ever studied the word BANK or considered just what a BANK ACCOUNT means?

Many people think of a bank as something for the purpose of serving only rich people. This Bank has clearly demonstrated this idea to be false by the attention which it offers to "everybody." Rich and poor alike find prompt and efficient service here.

Think of these different facilities for your convenience—checking accounts, savings accounts, letters of credit, safety deposit boxes, domestic and foreign exchange, collections, Christmas savings clubs, and many others. SCHOOL ROBBERIES CONTINUE DESPITE POLICE EFFORTS

Despite the fact that police have spread a dragnet about all city schools to break up the frequent looting of these institutions, robberies continue to be reported.

For the seventh time in the past four months, Walker Street school was reported entered and robbed Saturday, the theft having been committed Friday night. Another burglary was reported at the George Adair school, the janitor's bleycle, a quantity of cake and candy and numerous text books being among the articles reported missing.

Thursday night, thieves were sur-but managed to elude officers who attempted to eatch them redhanded in the act.

Within the past few weeks, in addition to the schools named above, buildings which have been victimized by thieves were the Ira Street, Fraser Street, Georgia Avenue, Pryor Street, and Fair Street schools, and a negro school on Mitchell street.

In practically each of the robberies, victrolas secured for the pupils' benefit through the Parent-Teacher associations, have been stolen, together with large numbers of records, and deskahave been systematically rifled, text books stolen and loot valued at hundreds of dollars taken.

There is a movement on foot by student bodies, faculties and Parent-Teacher associations of the respective institutions which have been victimized, to take concerted action toward waging a war on the continued operations of the gang of robbers. Chief of Police Beavers has sent assurances to

Governor Hardwick Gives Scouts Use Of Capitol Grounds

Following an appeal by Troop No. 27, Boy Scouts of America, through their scoutmaster, William F. McGlamery, to the chief executive of Georgia for the use of the capitol grounds for recreation, Governor Thomas W. Hardwick has sent the following letter:

"Replying to your letter of January
7, I beg to say that I will be glad for your scout troop to have the privilege of playing games on the capitol grounds.

'I hope that your troops will enjoy the recreation and beg to assure you that it is a pleasure for me to renew this privilege."

It is estimated that over A Quarter Million People will be in line tomorrow throughout the United States for a free $1.00 package of these tablets, thus making it the greatest day of its kind in all history.

As a result of the discovery of an amazing food factor called "Vitamines" science now shows why thousands of people may be slowly starving, that is, thin, weak, nervous, run-down, underweight and undernourished even on three or four big meals a day, while with a much smaller quantity of exactly the same food to which Vitamines have been added, they quickly put on good, firm flesh and become strong, healthy and vigorous. Following the astonishing report of the Medical Research Committee on this important subject, the Board of Directors controlling the Dae Health Laboratories obtained the American rights to manufacture Genuine Yeast Vitamine Tablets from the original formula of Dr. Catrin of the Faculty of Medicine of Paris. And to prove to the public the great value of this wonderful nutrition product, they voted to distribute ONE MILLION LARGE $1.00 PACKAGES, ABSOLUTELY FREE, as explained below. The moment this free distribution was armounced, desperate attempts were made to prevent publication of this announcement. Babson Tells Of Ford's Plans To Use Cotton

Cottonoid Vehicles Soon May Automobiles.

By MYLES E. CONNOLY. (Copyright for The Contistution.) Roger W. Babson was visiting Henry Ford's research laboratories in Detroit the other day.

"What will be the next development in automobiles," asked Mr. Bab

"It may be making the bodies of formaldehyde, glue and cotton," re-plied Ford. Ford grinned thinly, laconically. And so the auto wizard again awakes the world. Again, he jerks us up in our seats, makes us gasp, and stuns us with wonder.

"The hour will come," he says, when our children will go to the museum to see the ponderous limousine of today. The hour will come when the steel railway coach will be found in jank heaps and old picture

For Henry Ford is to make autos "Bosh!" says Mr. Has-been, phrase from a poet.

And so it is. Mr. Ford is a poet.
So was Fulton, so w. Bell, so were the Wright brothers. And their phrases were dream-phrases: ships

This is a composite interview with Mr. Ford and Mr. Babson. Mr. Ford is absent, but Mr. Babson speaks for him. When the great statistican is in Detroit, he makes a call on the great mechanic. They swap ideas and critical suggestions.

Likes Visits. "I like to visit Mr. Ford's plant," says Babson. "I like to look down on that mechanical masterpiece, see the great steamers dumping their load of ore, coal and lime, see the great steam derrics dumps the loads again steam derrics dumps the loads again into the mighty furnaces, see the 20 yast acres of land where the coke furnaces blaze away, see the magical auto grow from the rough ore, part on part, as each man adds his bit until it is rolled out a shining accomplishment and the last man adjusts the headlights.

"And I like to visit Mr. Ford. He is something of an autocrat. Men like him are. But he is America's greatest mechanic and Le has visions, dreams, ideas. He is not a states-greatest mechanic and Le has visions, dreams, ideas. He is not a statesman, not a philosopher. He is like one of his own locomotives. When it is on the track it is supreme.

"Consider his ideas. He wants to make a lighter and cheaper machine and he goes to cotton. He plans a mixture that will make cottonoid—a durable tough serviceable mereival a durable, tough, serviceable material out of which his vehicles may be

"If he succeeds, he will be able to stamp his auto parts the way the cook stamps doughnuts out of dough. His idea, he believes, will revolution-

"He, a pioneer in the manufacture of the light cars, sees a day of even lighter cars. And he is sure that the day of the heavy car is over. Tomorrow it will be an interesting reliquary of early years.
"He believes that the day of the steel coach is nearly done, that it, too, is doomed to take its place among "He is convinced that steel coaches "He is convinced that steel coaches would have disappeared by now except for the power the steel manufacturers hold over the railroads.

"I do not agree with him on that point. We have steel coaches the way we wear neckties."

"Slaves to Convention." Mr. Babson, standing framed in the sun-dazzled window of his Welles-

And until Henry Ford, nobody has changed it. He now startles them by changed it. He now startles them by offering to make coaches out of cotton. And I think he will.

"It will be of tremendous advantage, this innovation of his. Ninety-eight per cent of the load of an ordinary passenger train today does not pay. Two per cent alone is profitable, simply because of weight of the heavy cars. Think of the benefit of cars made of cottonoid!

"It is these unique, courageous ideas that make Henry Ford what he is. Another man might go on for half a century merely adding to or improving that which he had under his eye. Ford wil\ make an absolute divergence if he thinks it expedient. Further encouragement was found in telegrams from Dullas reporting more activity in the spot market there than in any preceding day this year.

The evening up on the long side carried prices 3 to 6 points under the close of yesterday, March dropping to 16.72. This liquidation was along very moderate lines as most traders felt that the ginning returns, due the first thing Monday morning, would be very small although there was some disposition to think that private estimates indicating only about 20,000 bales ginned this last period were somewhat too low.

New York, January 21.—(Special.)—Our market opened a few points over last night's close on buying from commission houses, probably short covering before the weekend. Outside of this, the market remained featureless. Interest is being centered on outside conditions. The trade is eagerly waiting the effect of the wage cut through New Eogland mills. The New England mills are contending that a reduction is necessary because of the lower wage scale through southern mills. Then there is a possibility of a miners' strike, in short, things outside affecting conditions generally are against the market, at least temporarily. Therefore, we expect the market to ease off until a good demand arises and outside conditions become more settled.

Advance:

Depression.

New York, January 21.—(Special.)—Many of the more active stocks made new highs for recent months in the last week and others advanced to near their best previous records on this movement. In a since the upward movement started in the fall because of the fact that industrials and rails were both strong, whereas in the fall and time.

Another feature of the past week was that among the stocks showing the largest advances were steels, rails, coppers, motors, oils, equipments, textiles and specialty stocks, with nearly all other groups,

In other words, the market broadened out materially. The best demand was from investment buyers in many stocks. Whils money firmed up somewhat, it was realized that this was but a temporary factor and that money would ease again soon, hence there was another active week of buying of bonds and investment stocks. At the present time there is a great buying movement going on in the stocks of com-panies that are securely on a dividend basis and which in addition have some speculative possibilities.

This includes many of the dividend rails and some of the dividend industrials. Added to this is an increasing public buying movement for speculation. The latter feature is tending to get the market into a condition where sharp advances will find everyone trying to take In fact, a little further advance, added to the good gains in the last two weeks, with so many stocks in or near new high ground for reaction would be necessary to restore more stability. It may be, therefuture, and a downward trend succeed it for a time. Thus some stocks month might go up another three or four points and then have a reaction of five to eight points from the highs.

No Extreme Weakness.

The prospect for such is quite strong, and will become more so if public buying continues heavy for a short time more. This may not be seen in the coming week, or on the other hand, it may be that only a day or two more of advances will be seen. That is something that can not be even guessed at in advance, for no one can estimate how much more public buying is coming in; that is, how much more there will be in excess of the profit-taking selling going on. Also no one can tell what the news of the immediate future will be, with possibilities that it will produce a considerable additional buying move and advances run into the week beyond. One thing looks rather certain, however, and that is that at some time before very long the market will work into a position where a definite halt will be seen in the upward trend and for a time prices will decline.

There is little probability of extreme weakness, just as of a loss of gortion.

There is little probability of extreme weakness, just as of a loss of a portion of recent gains. It is probable that only a short period of reaction will be seen, possibly not two weeks of it, and that prices will start climbing again and get into new high again by March. One reason for being in a general way bullish on the outlook, even though some reactions are to be expected for a time, is that the idle money that is piling up is certain to continue to be poured into the securities markets. It may be that real investment buying will tend to let up until the speculative buyers have finished with a profit-taking reaction, but it looks almost positive that investments, both bonds and stocks, are going to have successive waves of advances, with reactions between, for a long time to come. ween, for a long time to come. Call Money Advances.

The call money market firmed up in one afternoon from 3 1-2 per cent to 6 per cent as a result of a tremendous increase in demand for funds, a large part of it originating in the bond market. This was followed by some easing, but the general trend of call money in the week was higher than in the previous week, The time money market was generally about the same as the week before. While there will be temporary periods when demand for funds produces those flurries, it is quite probable that rates will tend down again in the next few weeks, and that in February or March time money will get down to 4 per cent and call money at times will loan under 3 per cent.

An event of considerable significance to the oil industry occurred in the last week in the advance in Mexia crude oil prices. The Mexia field has been a factor of great importance in the oil business, for this little Texas section has produced more oil in the last two months than any other part of the country. of the country.

It has been because of this new supply of high grade oil that the quotations of Pennsylvania crude oil were reduced 70 cents a barrel early in the month, and it had been feared that Mexia crude would cause sharp breaks in other oil quotations.

The fact that prices for Mexia crude have been advanced 25 cents a barrel, coming on top of a similar advance not long ago, indicates that either it is expected that there will be a demand for all of the oil that can be produced this year, and therefore the increasing supply of Mexia crude oil is lot a menace to other oil prices, or pelse that the sunpassedly. increasing supply of Mexia crude oil is not a menace to other oil prices, or clese that the supposedly limitless output from Mexia has reached a limit and is not soing to increase further. Either fact means that the danger of depression in the oil industry because of this new field no longer exists, and this is expected to have a decided influence on the price of the established oil company stocks in the near future.

prospects are good, however, there would not be such a certainty that increasing sums of idle money would be placed in the securities markets.

At the moment business is so dull in many lines that those who look only at the present become discouraged, but in many lines that those who look only in many lines a shortage of supplies exists that means a positive outlook for big orders when the normal spring demand in many lines will be above mal, therefore, a material improvement in general business will be seen, but there are good prospects that the demand in many lines will be seen, but there are good prospects that the demand in many lines will be avove normal this year. Trade reports are nearly all rather emphatic also, that the fall will be a period of great activity this year. The stock market always anticipates, and it is by no means too early to be anticipating a decided improvement in business later by rising stock prices now. Therefore while some reactions are to be looked for every now and then, it would probably be advisable for those seeking market profits to buy on the next good reactions that occur. By reactions are not meant the small downward flurries of the last week that came every now and then, but were quickly succeeded by new advances, but a movement lasting several days in succession under which stocks that have had big advances lately loose from a third to a half of the total recent gains. points, motors, oils and miscellaneous stocks of the chemical, textile and tobacco groups fared similarly and rails moved listlessly. Firmness and occasional strength were shown by coppers, shipings and chain store issues, local tractions also hardening.

Trading in bonds was fairly active, but changes in government issues showed net losses. Domestic rails also eased, and internationals were irregular with the foreign exchange market. Total sales, par value, aggregated $9.875,000.

Clearing house loans and discounts showed an actual contraction of $52, 561,000, or almost three times the expansion reported last week. An increase of $23,467,670 in actual cash holdings lifted excess reserves to approximately $40,000,000.

the week ending yesterday this For the week ending yesternay this report has the following to say in its resume of general business conditions:
"The south agricultural section makes the most favorable showing, with increased purchases and pay-ments and less indebtedness." This encouraging news comes from an unquestioned source, and is a fact and not an opinion. It is not a question, as perhaps is sometimes the case, of whistling to keep up courage. This report, in connection with others which have been coming to The Con stitution from various sources, both national and local, makes it look as if

PATIENCE AND COURAGE BASIC ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

BASIC ELEMENTS OF SUCCESS.

(From The Financial Survey.)

In the brokerage business one meets with all kinds of interesting people. They are made up of all types, from the occasional investor to the speculation who delights in the quicker maye. lator who delights in the quicker movements of the stock market. We admire success in this world, but not ail of us are able to attain it.

Since this success depends primarily on an accumulation of money, naturally the most interesting question asked a broker is, "What is the best way to make money buying and selling securities?" To give definite rules securities? To give definite rules for this purpose is practically next to impossible, but there are certain fixed fundamentals which, if observed, will result in the second of the sec result in success 90 per cent of the

The basis of many successful for times undoubtedly was due to the policy of looking ahead and having patience. Looking at any group of figures or diagram of market averages agricultural, the gain over last year is held, while the high mark of two years ago has not yet been attained.

"The south agricultural section makes the most favorable showing, with increased purchases and payments and less indebtedness.

"Payments in the east section are notably slow, showing a falling off of buying by the general public after the holiday sales.

"There are clear indicalons, however, that coming weeks we make a much better showing for the east section are notably slow, showing a falling off of buying by the ups and downs of the stock market. Methods of Protection

BY R. L. BARNUM

New York, January 21.—Immediately after the turn of the new year the stock exchange firm of E. W. Wagner & Co. failed. That firm, with liabilities then said to be $7,500,000, but which will turn out much larger, had thirty-nine branch offices in various cities throughout the country. A few days after this failure was announced your corpespondent received a letter from a reader of this column saying that by mere good luck an account had just been transferred from E. W. Wagner & Co. to Dier & Co. This letter then continued to this effect: "How am I to know that I will not wake up some morning and read in my paper that Dier & Co., like Wagner, has falled? What car I do to protect the money I place with a brokerage firm to use for investment or speculation?"

This week the failure of Dier & Co. was announced. The firm had This week the failure of Dier & Co. was announced. The firm had 30,000 customers and 8,000 accounts in fourteen cities, such as Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Milwaukee and Pittsburg. There were also three New York offices. The liabilities are given as $4,00,000 or more, which means that at least $4,000,000 of money belonging to the public On receiving the letter referred to above your correspondent replied that the best way to get a line on a brokerage firm was through a local bank; that the local banker could find out through his New York bank whether or not the brokerage firm in question was a member a local bank; that the local banker could find out through his New York bank whether or not the brokerage firm in question was a member of the stock exchange, and what its standing was in the financial district here. It was strongly suggested that business be done through a firm that is a member of the New York Stock Exchange, which means that the firm is subject to the rules of the stock exchange, including the right to make the most minute investigation at any time. the right to make the most minute investigation at any time.

Another Matter.

Speculation, however, is quite another matter. Speculation does involve taking a chance, but it should mean taking a chance using intelligence and intelligent effort backed up by sound financial resources. A contractor who takes a job to build a house is speculating. He makes his customer a price and must depend on fluctuating prices of labor, fuel, material and on the weather for his profits. They is not a man in legitimate business who does not speculate.

Today many farmers in this country are in financial difficulties because they started to speculate without sufficient financial resources. They held their grain or cotton for higher prices, instead of selling it, and held it oy borrowed money. This caused forced selling, and forced selling has carried prices down, making a bad matter.

Right here it might be said that a vice president of one of the big rail-roads running into New York who was born and raised up-state on a farm, and still successfully runs four farms, told your correspondent the other day that as a business policy long tried and found to be sound, he invariably sold his crops when they were harvested. On the average he finds that pays better than holding them.

Dier & Co. was not a member of the New York stock exchange. If the reader of this column who wrote for advice took the advice given she was tied up in this week's failure of Dier according to the New York Stock exchange for its own good to give the public better protection than it now has against failures. How can this be done?

advice took the advice given she was able to save her money from being the dup in this week's failure of Dier & Co.

Since the failure of Wagner and the receipt of the letter mentioned, your correspondent has been doing a lot of thinking on how out-of-town customers of brokerage firms here and elsewhere can be protected. It must be admitted that the percentage of stock exchange member failures to failures in other lines of business is relatively small. Nevertheless it must also be admitted that when a house such as Wagner, with its thirty-nine out-of-town offices fails, the thousands of customers of that firm are not only hurt, bit gives a black eye to every financial community and hurts railroads, industrial corporations, public utility combanies who are dependent upon public confidence to raise needs.

Some people will say why bother about protecting those who want to gamble in the stock market through srever, only displays ignorance. Some think gambling and speculation are synonymous. They are not. Gambling is taking a chance without intelligence or without making an intelligent effort to get at fundamental facts. Buying a stock on a mere tip is gambling just as much as betting on the turn of a wheel or a card.

Washington, January 2:—(By Constitution Leased Wire.)—The senate passed a mileage book bill today, which provided for the issuance of books from 1,000 to 5,000 miles under the regulations of the interstate commerce commission. The measure was originally introduced by Senator Watson, of Indiana, providing for 5,000 mile books at 2 1-2 cents per mile. The bill of Senator Harris, of Georgia, directed issuance of books by the interstate commerce commission at a rate of 33 1-3 per cent less than the segular rate.

Santor Harris offered an amendment providing for steel cars on railroad passenger trains, and forbidding wooden cars to be placed between steel cars, but a point of order against cont.

That 1922 is destined to be one of the greatest home building years this city has ever known is the opinion of City Building Inspector Bowen, and his opinion is backed up by the lacts—facts that are fast developing in the nature of building permits is used so far this year.

During the first twenty days of this year 188 building permits of all kinds were issued, and among these were permits covering bomes and apartment buildings that mean the housing of 121 more families. As compared with the first twenty days of last year only 28 were for homes.

IRISH BOUNDARY PROBLEM SETTLED. IT IS ANNOUNCED

London, January 21.—(By the Associated Press.)—The Irish situation took a surprising and unexpected turn today with the announcement that Michael Collins, head of the Irish provisional government, and Sir James Craig, premier of Ulster, had arrived at a mutual agreement which holds out the promise of a peaceable settlement between the north and the south. It was all the more surprising in view of the fact that Mr. Collins had only left Dublin last night to enter into consultation with Sir James this morning.

In addition to the arrangements made to settle the boundary question it was decided to cease forthwith mutual boycotts. What is considered of vast importance is the decision to devise a better system than the council of Ireland, as provided in the 1920 act, to deal with problems which affect the whole of Ireland.

winter they may work at the fac-• "This, you see, is another departure.

O "This, you see, is another departure. Most men plan their factories for the cities where they may obtain ready employees. Ford, on the other hand says to himself, why should the farmer loaf during the winter? "And he plans to utilize his spare time by building a factory right in the very hearts of the agricultural districts as long as he can get water power.

Ford's Pet Joke.

Ford's Pet Joke.

"The thing that was holding the ears of Detroit," said Mr. Babson, was the air-cooled motor question. Air cooling, although noisy, is cheaper. It burns less gasoline. But it seems that the automobile manufacturers by a general agreement have stuck to water cooling, all except the Franklin people.

"Now the General Motors company plans air-cooled engines. The other firms will probably follow suit. It will mean the scrapping of an enormous amount of machinery.

"Lasked Mr. Ford if he was going to have his products air cooled. 'Not just yet,' he returned. 'You see I have made one change on my radiator aiready. Haven't you noticed that the new cars are less noisy?

"I confessed I hadn't and asked him why.

"I contessed I hadn't and asked him why.
"'I've taken the brass band off them,' he grinned."
Even the loving father jokes about his child.

While prices were higher than they were last season, when cotton was to cents a pound cheaper, they are not as they were last fall in the period of advancing cotton prices.

Many of the large cotton buyers are looking for deliveries from 60 to 90 days ahead, except on those cloths where firm mill orders must be laid down to assure deliveries for fall distribution. The lighter weight fancy napped cottons have moved slowly and trading is better on chambrays, dress ginghams and colored yarn specialty fabrics.

Print cloths and sheetings eased off in consequence of unsettled cotton conditions, and there was less business in the fine combed yarn goods finished. In the wash fabrics there was an increase in the movement. The jobbers are beginning to secure more new business and are making more active spring shipments.

Wage reductions have begun in the England field, and are expected or received all mills. There has also in a waiting position and buyers appear to be holding off in the hope of a reduction in prices.

Copper has remained quiet. Some sales are being made by the copper wayor association for shipment to Germany and France, also Italy and Holland, but the business has been comparatively small. Otherwise, wery little, if any, export trade is reported and there has been no revival of demand from domestic buy-making more active spring shipments.

Wage reductions have begun in the England field, and are expected to reach all mills. There has also been some wage reduction in knitting centers in the United States. The openings of wool goods for fall next week are expected to increase the demand for living fabrics and cotton findings.

Current prices in primary channels are as follows:

Print cloths, 28-inch, 64x64s, 6 cents; 64x60s, 5 7-8 cents; 38 1-2 inch, 64x64s, 9 cents; brown sheetings, southern standards, 12 cents; tickings, eight-ounce, 25 cents; dendings, eight-ounce, eight-oun Meanwhile, second hands and some

While there is little increase in

While there is little increase in the demand for zinc, producers anticipate improvement in the near future, when the demand for steel products increases, which would bring the mills into the market.

Antimony continues quiet and easy, but even at concessions there is very little demand for export, and consumers seem to be well supplied.

a few days ago I was taking with a well-known amiets whose performances date back many years, and asked him what he thought of Join L. Sullivan compared with our later champions.

"Why," he said, "in my opinion Sullivan would have lasted a couple of rounds with Dempsey. You hear a lot of talk about the old-timers, but I heard the same stuff when I was a boy, forty years ago, and the people then were always telling us what shines we were compared to the men before our day. I think we're far ahead of the old-timers, in everything, athletics, boxing, baseball, music, art, science.

Of course it is difficult to make of course it is difficult to make any accurate comparison between old time boxers or wrestlers and modern champions. But in some sports we have actual times and measurements to compare, and the way these records go proves the modern athlete to be pretty fair.

In american track and field athletics

In amateur track and field athletics the 100-yard race was run in 9 3-5 seconds for the first time by Arthur Duffey, in the intercollegiate championships, May 1902. Before that Bernie Wefers' 9 4-5 seconds was supposed to be unbeatable.

Since then Dan Kelly, Arthur Robinson, C. H. Patching, Howard Drew, James Rector, and Charlie Paddock have run in 9 3-5 seconds. Paddock has made that time in several races and some of the watches have record-ed 9 2-5 seconds.

It is claimed by Japanese authorities that Minoru Fujii of Tokio university, ran 100 yards on grass in 9 2-5 seconds, the faculty of the university vouching for the timing. However, athletic sports were new in Ja-pan then, and the most learned col-lege professor may not qualify as a timing expert.

The 220-yard record was held for many years by Wefers, and equalled at different times by Craig, Lippin-cott and G. Parker. But the latest sprinting king, Charlie Paddock, cut this down to 20 4-5 seconds in 1921—a performance that eclipses anything the old timers ever did.

May Do Even Better. Paddock is the greatest sprinter ever known in either amateur or professional sport. His most remarkable performance, aside from his 220-yard record, was made in the Southern Pacific A. A. U. championships, held at Redlands, California, April 23, 1921.

In this meet Padodck broke four world's records and equalled one. He ran 100 yards in 9 3-5 seconds, equalran 100 yards in 9 3-5 seconds, equaling the record, and continuing covered 100 meters (about 110 yards) and broke a record with 10 2-5 seconds. The former record was 10 3-5 seconds. In Paddock's second race was timed at 200 meters, 220 yards, The 220 yards was run 3-5 of a slower than his own world record, but he broke the world's records for 200 maters making it in 21

ords for 200 meters, making it in 21 1-5 seconds, the 300 yards in 30 1-5 seconds, and the 300 meters in 33 4-5 seconds. This beat Bernie Wefers' 25-year-old record of 30 3-5 seconds. Paddock is still in his prime, and possibly improving. He intends to run another year, and may break more records.

only two great old time records tand today. In 1900 Maxie Long ran the 440 in 47 seconds even, on a straightaway track. He was timed in 42 1-5 seconds at 400 yards. The 400-yard run is not included in the total called the time of the total called the time of the total called the time. 400-yard run is not included in the usual athletic program. Also there are few quarter miles run on a straightaway. But Maxie Long's record, made twenty-two years ago, has not been touched. Long ran a quarter mile around two turns at Travers Island in 47 4-5 seconds. Ted Meredith bettered this performance in 1916 when he ran around one turn in 47 when he ran, around one turn in 47
2-5 seconds. These performances all eclipse any middle distance running of earlier times.
Charlie Kilpatrick's half mile record lasted many years, and such great runners as Sheppard and Parsons couldn't crack it. Emile Lunghi of Italy broke it first, but Ted Mere-dith's half-mile in 1 minute 521-5 seconds, in 1916, lowered it more than

THE FASTEST

George was the great mile runner a quarter century ago, and as a professional ran in 4 minutes 12 3-4 sec-

ressional ran in 4 minutes 12 3-4 seconds. His amateur record was first broken by John Paul Jones with a mile in 4 minutes 14 2-5 seconds, run in open scratch competition in the intercollegiate meet.

Norman Taber broke the record again in 1915, with 4 minutes 12 3-5 seconds, which was faster than George's professional mile. While this record was accepted by the athletic authorities it was a doubtful performance, being actually a paced race. Fast middle distance runners were sent out ahead with big handicaps, to jog along easily and pick Taber up and pace him through the different quarters of the race.

Alvin Kraenzlein, of Pennsylvania,

Alvin Kraenzlein, of Pennsylvania, was the great athlete of his day, making hurdling and broad jumping records. His 23 3-5 seconds for the 220-yard low hurdles in 1898 was a marvelous performance, and still stands, atthough equaled by Wendell in 1913 and Robert Simpson in 1916. But Kraenzlein's 120-yard hurdle record has been beaten by Garrells, Smithson, Kelly Murray and others.

When the race was run in 15 seconds it was thought the limit of speed had been reached, but Robert Sompson celipsed all other performances in 1916—a great athletic year—just before the war caused a temporary lapse in sports, by running in 143-5 seconds. Earl Thomson has been timed in 142-5 seconds. Kalchmainen has broken nearly all distance records up to 10 miles. New York, January 21.—George and Abe Mitchell, British professional golfers, who toured this country last performed in 14.2-5 seconds. Earl Thomson has been timed in 14.2-5 seconds. Kalchmainen has broken nearly all distance records up to 10 miles.

The high jump of 6 feet 4.5-8 inches by Dan Sweeney twenty-five years ago remained a record until Horine cleared 6 feet 7 inches in 1912. Beesom of California, beat that five-sixteenths of an inch in 1914.

Today McGrath, Ryan and McDonald have tossed the big hunk of lead over 40 feet. The world's shot putting record stood at 47 feet for years, made by George Gray. Ralph Rose in 1919 put it 51 feet. A California high school boy, Bud Houser, has recently put over 48 feet in the national championships and will undoubtedly break the record if he continnes in competition. The discus record was held by Robert Garret, of Princeton, back in 1896, and was less than 100 feet. Today a dozen athletes are throwing more than 140 feet. Arlie Mucks threw 155 feet from a 7-foot circle and Jim Duncan over 156 feet from the Olympic 8 foot 21-2-inch circle. What was the largest crowd ever gathered in America at a sporting event? We have heard all the arguments for football, with its immense crowd. Nor is there any doubt that, if proper seating could be a rranged football would outdraw any sport in the United States over a brief season. Total attendance figures for late September, October and November indicate that college football, in a little over two months, drew more than major league baseball and the organized minors drew in seven months. Of course, there were many more colleges playing, but baseball played many more days. Baseball didn't begin with the birth of the American league as the faithful fan is gradually being led to believe. The real beginning of the game was in 1871. Rules are being made every season, but that hasn't changed the game to any great extent. Boston and Chicago clubs seemingly, had a first mortgage on the winnings of pennants, for, in the first ten seasons of the National league, the Chicago club won six pennants and the Boston outfit were. Providence was the only compared to get in on the honor and in 1870 and 1884, that team won the pennant. This was from 1876 the pennant. This was from 1876 Monopoly on Pennants.

Vivid Story of Original White Sox

Anson Was The Ideal Diamond Chief

The great club representing Chicago during these years was, undoubtedly, one of the greatest teams the game ever had. It was in 1876 that the big western city made a deal whereby it landed such stars as Anson, Spalding, Paul Hines and Ross Barns and a pennant was forthcoming. However, the Chicago team began operations in 1880 and had on Pfeffer, who didn't get in the edly, one of the greatest teams the its lineup Anson, Williamson, Burns, Quest, Fint, Mike Kelly, George Core, Abner Dalyrimple, Fred Goldsmith, Larry Corcoran and Hugh Nicol.

the period when skillful hurlers were a rarity the great aggregation had this due who equaled the best in the game. Corcoran had a record of pitching three no-hit games. With the coming of "Big Jim" McCorwack in 1885 the Chicago club strengthened its pitching staff considerably, Great was McCormack and he won fourteen consecutive games after joining the Chicago team in 1885. In 1886 the big "submarine" hurler won sixteen games in succession, beginning with the first game of the season. It was a case of a great hurler with a great team supporting him. In the fall of 1884.

Now that Gene Tunney has defeated the veteran Battling Levinsky, thus annexing the American light-heavyweight championship, and Georges Carpentier has knocked out George Cook, of Australia, and is preparing to return to the United States to do battle with Tommy Gibbons in New York for the world's championship, in-

York for the world's championship, interest is being revived in a division that has been virtually at a standstill for a long time, due to the fact that there were few performers in it and Levinsky was allowed to go along as the chief, although he fought heavyweights most of the time and his title was not in danger. Levinsky lost the world's title when he was knocked out a year ago by the Frenchman and Tunney relieved him of the American crown.

There are now at least four topmothers in this division who are to be engaged in an elimination contest this winter to settle a dispute that has arisen through rather unexpected activity in the light heavyweight rank, the past few months. They are Tunney, Gibbons, Levinsky and Billy Miske. The latter steps to the fore by virtue of his win over Charley Weinert a few night ago in New York, the St. Paul boxer having a decided advantage for twelve rounds.

Gibbons Should Get Title.

Gibbons Should Get Title.

Gibbons Should Get Title.

This section cannot be expected to develop an opponent for Jack Dempsey, as it usually does, unless Gibbons should stow away the balance of the field, which is not improbable. Gibbons should beat Carpentier, although, despite his defeat at the hands of the heavyweight king in rather easy fashion last July at Jersey City, the Frenchman is going to appear as a worthy foe for the St. Paul light-heavyweight. His win over Cook proved that he stiff is in splendid shape and able to give the public his best. The Frenchman can hit, but he is easy to hit and against Gibbons he will be facing an experienced, crafty ring general with a wallop and plenty of stamina. This will furnish him with a vastly different foe from the blacksmith from Kangaroo land who was an easy victim due chiefly to lack of experience. The state of the s

Anson coached that busher with the intention of making him one of the great hurlers of the game.

Yes, the Chicago Nationals during the early eighties were one of the great teams of baseball. The big league teams of that period didn't have the equipment, didn't have the appropriate to provide the equipment, didn't have the appropriate to great teams of that period didn't was a case of stick to the end unless a player lost a leg or something. Anson didn't have a bunch of catchers; one regular and two of the regular fielders, as a rule, did the backstopping. Mike Kelly could catch better than Flint but he was used every game in some other position and "Silver" Flint caught almost steadily from 1880 until 1885.

In 1886, Mike Kelly and John Clarkson were paired as a battery by Manager Anson and soon were famed as the greatest baseball battery in the world. Anson was proud of that pair but Spalding sold these wonders to Boston for $20,000. With the sale of Clarkson and Kelly in 1887 and 1888, the dissolution of the famous White Stockings of Chicago began and in a few seasons or, after the brotherhood war, only Captain Anson and Burns were left.

PITCHER JOHN COUCH TRADED TO CINCY

San Francisco, January 21 .- John ny Couch, pitcher for the last two years with the San Francisco baseball club, has been traded to the Cincin-nati Reds for four players, so far un-named publicly, it is announced here. The deal was arranged for Couch at is request.

The pitcher was with the Detroit mericans in 1917, with a perfect defense and ran up a lead of 21-8, and then decided to call it a day. Not a single athlete on the club roster, with the exception of Morris, seemed to be taking more than a perfunctory interest in the game, though John Graves once or twice indulged in some persiflage with the Birminghamers. Scott worked as easily as a man ever does in a basketball game, but nevertheless, achieved a whole lot, despite the fact that he was guarded as closely as Frank DuPre on the way back from Detroit. Just take the games during the past week, for example. Alabama remains undefeated. Tech showed great power in scoring her victory over the Mercer Baptists at the Auditorium. This splendid record enjoyed by the Atlantans is going to play no part in making the Memphians quake with the terror. The truth of the matter is the record will work the other way. It'll make the visitors seek to smear it. It will simply be the test of the best in basketball in this section pitted against the best of another section of the southland. The battle for supremacy is certain to be one long remembered by Atlanta's basketball followers.

The days between now and Friday will be hard ones for the men under Bean's direction. He realizes fully the power of the Memphis quintet, and wise old mentor that he is. Joe Bean knows that his players must be in shape for the ordeal.

STADIUM CONSTRUCTION SHOWS GRID'S STRIDES.

The construction of stadiums the various colleges of the United States proves the development of football in this country. There was a good story in every one of the figures. The data told first of the days of the old Roman Empire, the Circus Maximus and the Coliseum at Rome, together with mention of numerous other ampitheaters that seated from 50,000 to 87,000 spectators.

Then, to rival these stadiums, it was brought out that many American colleges have constructed just as huge structures to house their athletic activities, pointing out that this building was accomplished through the profits derived from football.

In the south, the stadium at Grant field was said to be the largest, an Presbyterian and Gordon Street End Presbyterian winning their games the Presbyterian winning their games the Presbyterian winning their games the

The Yale bowl and the University

The Yale bowl and the University of Washington's stadium at Seattle, Washington has her stadium, erected in 1914, which can accommodate 50,000 spectators. Lehigh, Chicago, Ohio State and Illinois are other colleges that have erected huge stadiums to care for their customers, and many are under construction in various parts of the country. The largest high school stadium in the United States is at Washington, where the games of the Central High school are played.

Quoting from the article containing the statistics: "The stadium movement is not confined to the college and university towns, because many smaller communities have made preparations for the physical development of the young folks. In Chicago plans have already been made and funds secured for the erection of a huge concrete municipal stadium on the lake front, which will have a a huge concrete municipal stadium on the lake front, which will have a seating capacity of 100,000, and will be the largest stadium in the country."

We have Bill's word for it, and it's gilt-edged.

Bill handles baseball for Griffin, just as he handles a lot of other things for the good folk of that section, in a big league fashion. When he isn't talking baseball or doing something for the Griffin baseball club, he is busy getting something good for his townspeople.

So it comes to pass that while other communities in Georgia are hemming and hawing over bringing in some major league baseball talent during the spring training season, Bill and his associates have already completed arrangements for their games and the advance advertising has started.

Only Natural That Crimson Alumni Should Want to See Harvard Teams Play-Discusses Gridiron's Progress.

spread discussion has been stirred up among college men by President A. Lawrence Lowell's observations on Harvard's football policy in his annual report, and some take issue with him on the question of games away from home.

Dr. Lowell states that criticism has been directed to Harvard's refusal to play games away from Cambridge. He says "such policy has been alleged to be exclusive, if not unfair." He calls attention to the fact that at the last meetings of the Associated Harvard clubs a vote was passed urging that the Harvard eleven should play with one of the great colleges of the middle west in alternate years at the stadium and on the field of that college. It seems to the writer that when Dr. Lowell attributes this vote to a desire to carry on a contest for national championship in football, he reads into something which the graduates did not intend.

Anent Title Games.

It has been the writer's experience, said particularly those older ones like Harvard, that there is no desire on the part of their graduates to have their teams contend in a national football to the fact that a there is no desire on the part of their graduates to have their teams contend in a national football to the fact that there is no desire on the part of their graduates to have their teams contend in a national football to the fact that harvard's action a few years ago in placing a team of subs against Brown was bitterly reference to this subject probably was a grainst Brown last against seams.

Anent Title Games.

It has been the writer's experience, backed up by conversation with the authorities at the larger universities, and particularly those older ones like Harvard, that there is no desire on the part of their graduates to have their teams contend in a national football championship, but that practically the majority of them are quite in accord with Dr. Lowell's views on the majority of them are quite in accord with Dr. Lowell's views on the majority of them are quite in accord with the main rivals and regarding other contests as more or less incidental.

But there is one fact of which bulks large in this desire for an occasional intersectional game, and that is net thousands of graduates who go out from Harvard, as well as from other eastern institutions, spread out over the country and have little or no opportunity of returning to their almanater to see even the big champion; ship game. These men are hungry for the sight of a crimson or blue jersey, and the real thrill of supporting their team in a big game. It is this feeling which actuated them to a degree in wanting their university's team play, where they can see it in action.

The Growth of Game.

Dr. Lowell explains that it is necessary in view of the chiracter of the game, to save the best men for the more important games to come. It will be recalled that Harvard's action a subs against Brown was bitterly reference to this subject probably was due to the hostility shown last season by some of the spectators to which bulks at the crowd the mattitude of a portion of the crowd threatened to develop into the visiting team is a natural desire on the visiting team is a natural desire on the part of the unprejudiced spectator to see the "under dog" win, since Harvard teams are so good they are always the favorites.

To begin with, it is highly probable that Phil Morrison will be back in Birmingham for another year. True, he is the property of the Pirates, and looks like he might have a great future before him. Still Phil hasn't been in professional baseball a gerat length of time, and it is doubtful if he can make the grade in the majors his first season out. The return of Whitey will give Moley three dependable men, who have pltched Southern league baseball, and who have measured up to all requirements.

Meeker May Be Find. Recent dope on Roy Meeker, how-ever, would tend to show that the former little Baron side-wheeler is going to give some one a run for the money in the job hunting department this year. Roy worked for Ray Ryan's crub in the Virginia league last summer and was recognized as one of the top-notch performers of that circuit.

Red Bates, the local phenom, pitched such marvelous ball for Griffin in the Georgia State league last summer that Baron officials are already coming to look upon him as a fixtures for the 1922 campaign.

There has never been any doubt about Bed's stuff or his fast ball. All that was necessary to make him a Class A performer was the brushing off of the rough spots by a year in the bushes. Moley figures a year under Smutter Matthews has made Hed efficient for Southern league work.

Bill Statham, the new Baron pitcher who was swapped by the Nashville club for Tommy Gallagher, suffered a disastrous campaign while defending the Vol colors last summer. A sore arm, overwork and poor handling collaborated on making Bill ineffective. The season before he graduated from the Augusta club in the Sally league went to Nashville and won seven straight games in the latter part of the season. He was looked upon at that time as nothing short of a marvel. When he flivvered last year the fans couldn't understand what was the matter.

The adoption of boxing as a major sport by the Harvard athletic officials is regarded as the greatest boost ever given the mitt sport. How Much Energy Does It Take to Carry a Man to the Moon?

Energy sufficient to carry a pound of sugar a distance of 50,000,000 miles; to transport 260 bushels of potatoes from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast is no greater than the energy necessary to rut a car over 10,000 miles of average road.

The momentum of a car is delivered to it by the engine through the rear wheels. This means that there is a ed to it by the engine through the rear wheels. This means that there is a terrific amount of energy expended through the rear tires.

Miller the men say the immensity of the energy expended may be further understood when it is realized, that collected, it would be sufficient to cover a rear weighing 200 nounds. carry a man weighing 200 pounds to carry a man weighing 200 pounds to the moon, 240,000 miles away. Is it any wonder then that automobile tires wear out?

St. Louis, Mo., January 21.—Russell E. Gardner, president of the Gardner Motor company, Inc., announces a drastic reduction in the price of the Gardner tourng, roadster and sedan models.

The J. L. Carroll company's new filling station on Spring and Nasau streets, served more than 900 motorists Saturday, the opening day. This remarkable business was due in part to the announcement that two gallons of gas would be put into each car coming to the new station opening day, without any charge whatever.

This is one of the many companies to recognize the coming importance of Spring street as a main automobile artery.

She was the eldest of the children, with four little sisters, and the family drudge, doing most of the housework and washing the clothes. Yet she was ambitious and had tried so hard to go to school. But the constant drag of home duties kept her behind until she had about given up hope.

"We provided a small pension to supplement the father's meager wages, and sent the little girl away to school where she could learn some practical trade. She is now 14, has made splendid progress in her studies and is trade. She is now 14, has made splendid progress in her studies and is making money doing some dressmaking. We have also had her under the watchful care of the Anti-Tuberculosis association and the family has been provided with a milk diet to build up the health of all members. The father has gained so well that he now attends to a garden of his own after work, which supplies the fam-ily with its fresh vegetables."

Taking Witness Stand, Former Macon Cashier Denies He Embezzled Funds of City.

Macon, Ga., January 21 .- (Special.) The case of A. H. Stewart, former city treasurer, charged with embezzle ment of more than $9,000 of city funds while serving as treasurer, went to the jury late this afternoon and after deliberating for two hours the jury went to supper without a verdict having been reached.

"If it had been my intention steal," in his statement to the jury today Stewart said, "does it not ap-pear that I would have taken enough to live on when hundreds of thou-sands of dollars were in my custody sands of dollars were in my custody and control."

The former treasurer reviewed his life for the last fifteen years, saying that in this time he had handled milions of dollars while serving as cashier of various Georgia banks.

leged shortage was discovered, he went to Atlanta to n...t the district manager of an insurance company rel-ative to a position, he said, but that it suddenly became necessary for him to go to the home office of the com-pany in New York and that it was while there that he became aware that he was accused of embezzlement and that an audit of his books was showing a shortage of seyeral thousand dollars.

No Corroboration He communicated with Mrs. Storart and returned to Macon as soon as he could, he testified. No corroborative evidence of the alleged eastern excursion was offered by the defense.

Efforts to turn the case into a prosecution of O. V. Speer, assistant treasurer, were continued today by counsel for Stewart. Considerable testimony was introduced today to prove or disprove that Speer, a subject of asthma, had been furnished narcotics to relieve the ailment and that when under the influence of drugs he was irresponsible and afterward could not remember what he had done.

Stewart, in reciting his past, laid stewart, in reciting his past, laid considerable stress on the fact that as treasurer of the Baptist Holding commission for the Georgia Baptist convention, he handled many thousands of dollars in securities and cash and that the church folk lauded him for his "faithful and efficient work" for his "faithful and efficient work" Wife at Side.

He explained the possession high-class automobile as being the result of ownership of several used cars. He passed over the possession of diamonds, saying that the only ones he ever bought were for mem bers of his family or for himself. Seated with Stewart at counselectable during the trial of the case were his aged mother, his wife and chil-dren and Mrs. Stewart's father.

DEFENSE SCORES POINT AT TRIAL OF ARBUCKLE

San Francisco, January 21 .- Mrs Kate Hardebeck, former housekeeper for Miss Virginia Rappe, motion picture actress, was the first witness to-day in the second trial of a manslaughter charge against Roscoe C. (Fatty) Arbuckle, in connection with Miss Rappe's death. She identified the riding habit worn by Miss Rappe when the actress motored from Los Angeles to San Francisco two days before attending the party in the Ho-Angeles to San Francisco two days before attending the party in the Hotel St. Francis at which Arbuckle is alleged to have fatally injured her. An attempt by the defense to prove through Mrs. Hardebeck that Miss Rappe was under the care of a physical strains. cian previous to the party, was ruled out. The defense contends that Miss Rappe's injuries were due to a chronic affection of one of her abdominal organs. Walter E. Trefts, secretary to the Walter E. Trefts, secretary to the district attorney, was called in an effort by the prosecution to have Miss Zey Prevost, one of its principal witnesses, declared hostile. Miss Prevost "did not remember" certain evidence on which she testified positively at the former trial. Trefts took a statement from Miss Prevost. The court held that no foundation had been laid for the impeachment of Miss Prevost, and ruled against the prose-Prevost and ruled against the prose-

The prosecution reopened the argument on new legal points, however, and the jury was excused. The de-fense was again sustained with the proviso that the prosecution may present new authorities on the point.

The conflict arose over the alleged failure of Miss Prevost to remember her statement in the previous trial:

"Miss Rappe said 'he hurt me.'"

Miss Prevost had denied that she made a statement that Miss Rappe

In Savannah said:
"He killed me," and the argument also covered this point.

IS INDICTED FOR ATTEMPTED ASSAULT ON GIRL

Moultrie, Ga., January 21 .- (Spe cial.)—Marlin Fallin, of Coolidge, to-day was indicted by the Colquitt coun-ty grand jury on a charge of attempt ing to criminally assault a Moultrie girl several weeks ago. Fallin will be arrested at once and probably will go to trial next week.

At a preliminary trial held soon At a preiminary trial held soon after the warrant was issued for his arrest Fallin was exonerated, Justice Maire, of the Moultrie district, holding that the evidence produced did not warrant Fallin being bound over to superior court.

At the preliminary trial, Fallin produced records showing that it was two weeks after the alleged attack before he was accused. The warrant at that time charged him with crimi-

Poor Bunnies! Autos Are Used To Hunt Them

Tifton, Ga., January 21 .- (Special.) Locating rabbits at night with an auto spotlight and shooting them from an utomobile is the latest fad with Tif-

Many plant farms surround Tifton and these are green and tempting to rabbits in mid-winter.

The bunnies enter them in large numbers at night and the new and favorite way to hunt them is to drive very slowly by the plant patch and throw the spotlight down the cabbage rows.

One man drives while the other holds the gun and when the rabbit is spotted he makes an easy mark.

Sportsmen who have tried it say they can kill until they are tired and a bag of half a dozen rabbits is the work of less than an hour.

Some railroads have already placed petitions for reduced rates before the railroad labor board, following failure to reach an agreement with their employees and other ronds are ready to submit petitions, railroad officials said today. These petitions can be withdrawn, it was stated, if regional conferences result in satisfactory results or the railroads can proceed with their plans to reduce rates by submitting the question to employees so they will be in a position to carry their requests to the labor board in case the conferences are unsuccessful. The four transportation brotherhoods involved are the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and constitute approximately one-fourth of the railway employees of the country.

POLICE SEEKING MEN WHO STAGED DARING ROBBERY

As a result of reports made police Saturday by Henry Clark, negro driver for the A. McD. Wilson Grocery com-pany, that he was held up at the point of a pistol by two white men and forced to drive a short distance, after which he was fleeced of approximately $100 in cash, detectives were seek-ing to establish the identity of the robbers.

The holdup, occurring in broad day-light Saturday morning at 8 o'clock near Ponce de Leon avenue and Mer-rits avenue, was stated by police to be one of the most daring reported in recent months. One of the men, the driver told detectives, leaped to the running board of the truck and displayed a special officer's badge, demanding to know why the negro was driving to fast

From Brenau.

The annual European trip conducted by Miss Eva F. Pearce, dean of the college, will be made up largely of members of the present student body. The trip for this summer is of unusual interest to those who are interested in travel. Visits to Naples, excursions to Pompeii, Sorrento and Amalfi, Rome, "The Eternal City," Florence, Venice, Switzerland, the Mine, Holland, Belgium, Paris and London. Among the most interesting events of the trip will be the visit to the quaint village of Oberammergau, where they will see "The Pashion Play," the world's greatest drama. The party will leave New York about June 15 and will be away for some three months. Among those who are planning to make the trip this summer are Misses Idelle and Nodie Shaw, Lucile Westerfield and Irma Floyd.

Miss Mildren Southwick appeared in a recital in the Brenau auditorium on Monday evening. Miss Southwick gave Barrie's famous play, "Rosalind," and a cutting from "Romance," by Shelton. After the recital Mrs. H. J. Pearce entertained informally in the Brenau parlors for her. A number of members of the faculty and townspeople were present.

Mrs. Walter D. Lamar Appointed

The state regent has recently appointed Mrs. Walter D. Lamar, of Macon, Ga., state chairman of Indian welfare and protection.

This department is one our society is evincing deep interest in, realizing that the Indian, as a race, has never received its just due. It is of interest to note that, in the world war, there were fewer slackers among the Indians than among any other race. It is now opportune that our government should grant these people citizenship, and the patriotic society of

How to Make Work for Everybody

A Sure Way to Keep Factories Busy. Give Every Capable Manand Woman Employment and Provide a Market for Farm Products

> It is time to give a practical turn to the well-meant efforts to get work for the unemployed.

> People cannot be employed unless there is work for them to do. There is no other way.

What makes work? A demand for the products of our farms and factories. Without that the farmer cannot safely pitch his crop and the manufacturer cannot safely run his factory. All other activities depend on these.

The people of Georgia can, without the expenditure of an additional dollar, increase the pay rolls of factories by many millions, give employment to everyone who is able to work and furnish a market for diversified farming that will be an everlasting bulwark against the boll weevil.

Every month our people are sending out of the State millions of dollars and this money supports thousands of people in distant regions while thousands of our own people, equally capable, are out of work.

Don't be deluded with the idea that you get something better by going to a distant State for it when the very best is produced in Georgia.

Remember This: The consumers themselves carry the key to the unemployment problem. They say whether you shall be employed or the work shall be given to somebody in a distant State.

The board of directors consists of thirty members. The terms of one-third of these automatically expire each year. There are thirteen directors to be elected at this time, and the names of those receiving the lagrest number of votes will be announced the evening of the banquet.

Union Suits and Vests of the Highest Quality at Most Extraordinary Savings

-You win! What? Amazing savings on summer underwear. Fresh, new knit union suits and vests. The "why" of these savings is an interesting story of big business.

-When in the market last September our buyer was included in a tremendous business deal. At that time, a certain sagacious New York jobber foresaw the rise in cotton. He was positive that his vision was correct. He knew that manufacturers were anxiously seeking business. Consequently, he planned to place an advance order for summer underwear while prices were low.

-He selected a few of his most valued and large accounts and invited them to join him. It looked like a good proposition to our buyer, who accepted the offer.

-Time has proved the move was the right one. The knitwear in this Sale was contracted for last September. It is good. Of excellent quality, made to fit, and wear a long, long time.

—The thrifty shopper will sense a marvellous bargain in this knitwear, with a well-defined accent on the gain.

Show a Service Star

BY MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD. Macon, Director of Publicity, Georgia W. C. T. U.

Woman's Christian Temperand mion inaugurated, with the new year, a service-star campaign to secure the placing in homes and business houses a placard of blue ground and white star, with "Serve America. Support the Constitution," lettered in white, signifying total abstinence from the use of liquor and high regard for the observance of law.

This movement is nation-wide in its scope, and it is proposed that each of the 25,000 local unions send to the national W. C. T. U. Publishing house, in Evanston, Ill., for quantities of stars for immediate distribution. They are only 10 cent each, or $3 per hun

Advanced Cooking Class For Woman's Club.

One of the most popular of the classes, that of cooking, which is held at the Girls High school, and which, therefore, has the advantage of laboratory facilities with individual cooking apparatus for each member of the class, will hold an advanced class in cooking, instead of the beginners' class, which has hitherto been the only one given by the Woman's club. This will prove a welcome announcement for the housewife who wishes to learn the latest frills, buying, cooking and serving. All those who have taken any elementary cooking work whether in any of the lecture courses given in town by either the government demonstrators or others, or any woman fairly experienced in cooking, will find this a fascinating course, and may enroll with Mrs. Jesse Manry. The teachers of this course are Miss Clara Lee Cone, head of the domestic science department of the Girls' High, and Miss Mary Means, also of Girls' science department of the Girls' High and Miss Mary Means, also of High, and censor of the Atlanta Woman's cookbook.

Approval and Endorsement; The Responsibility They Entail

One of the most vital points brought out by the director for Georgia of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, in an interview which appears today on the federation page, concerning the recent meeting of the national board of directors of the general federation. has to do with the matter of approvals and indorsements by the genwal federation and the federated clubs.

There was a discussion which proved one of the keynote features at the meeting, hinging on the dangers of unstudied approval and reckless indorsement of matters or movements in which clubwomen may be interested.

The result of discussion was a clear definement of what the federation and its affiliated clubs will mean in future by approval and Approval will be the sanction a club, or a federation of clubs gives some movement initiated outside the federation, which movement the club or the federation does not obligate itself to promote by active co-operation.

Indorsement will mean sanction of the movement-approval in other words-combined with the pledge of active assistance in that

The evils of reckless approval or indorsement given without careful study of both sides of the question, were forcibly brought out in specific instances related and in clear exposition of the principles underlying approval or indorsement.

One of the strongest women taking part in the discussion, whose arguments went a long way in the final definition of approval and indorsement as they are intended by the general federation, was Mrs. Edward F. White, assistant district attorney of the state of Indiana, ho is the general federation's chairman of legislation.

The women's organizations are more than ever in the public eye n account of their broadening interests in public matters and the broader responsibility which now lies with them, that the members are legally recognized citizens.

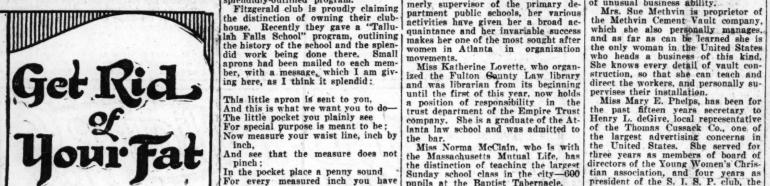

When they put the stamp of their approval on any movement, or give their indorsement, with the entailed obligation of assistance in the promotion of that movement, it is the act now of a body which Brief Report annot escape through subsequent inaction the results of its deeds. As a leading Georgian said, not long ago, to a group of clubwomen: "Men may be forgiven their mistakes in public life, women never

The general federation, of which every club in Georgia affiliated with the state body is now a part, is going to emphasize for considera-tion within the federation itself, this idea of going slow on approval indorsement; a clear understanding on the part of clubwomen of and indorsement; a clear understanding on the part and the obligations the difference between approval and indorsement and the obligations each entails, and finally, the responsibility before the world which they assume when they take either action as regards movements not directly initiated by themselves.

Conference On Marketing Will Interest Women

Women all over Georgia will find Women all over Georgia will find interest in the marketing conference to be held in Athens under the auspices of the Georgia State College of Agriculture during farmers' week, January 23-27; the state farm bureau meets in Athens at this time.

Especially on Thursday and Friday of the conference will there be speakers and topics of interest to women. Noteworthy among the women ers and topics of interest to women.

Noteworthy among the women speakers will be Mrs. Ola B. Powell, of the states relations service of the department of agriculture, Washington, whose subject will be "Observations From Abroad," and Miss Susie Powell, state agent of Mississippi, whose subject will be "Co-operative Marketing Among Farm Women."

Of interest to women also will be the annual conference of the college of agriculture extension work. 'This means that the home demonstration work will have all of its representatives present, numbering about eighty women, who are in charge of this work in the various counties and districts of the state. There will be a discussion of the nutrition work being carried on by these agents and reports from the field. This is one of the most interesting and significant activities being carried on at the present time.

miss Mary E. Cresswell, director of home economics of the State College of Agriculture, will lead a discussion in Agriculture, will lead a discussion in co-operative marketing and there will be demonstrations and exhibits in marketing farm women's products, prepared by Miss Lois P. Dowdle and Miss Bessie Stanley Wood, assistant state agents, Georgia State College of Agriculture.

From Third District.

Many encouraging reports come from the clubs of the third district. The Dawson Woman's club, 15 years old, is very proud of the distinctive place she holds among the sister clubs of the county. PEOPLE AND THINGS OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Business Women Organizing For Civic Work

The business women of Atlanta have been discovered before they have discovered themselves. Tentative efforts had been initiated by individuals on several occasions within the past two or three years, to bring the business and professional women into an organization, for the two-fold purpose of the pleasure and benefit there would be in contact, and the value of such organization to any purpose to which the business and professional women, thus organized, might wish to com-

The public was quicker to see the advantage of such an associa tion than were the business and professional women themselves, with a few exceptions. Proof of this lay in the number of requests for the co-operation of such an organization, even before it was functioning, and in the opposition which was brought to bear. If there had not been possibilities of strength in such an organization, opposition would not have been worth while.

Almost simultaneously now two movements have taken form, for the organization of what is now this very numerous element, the business and professional women of Atlanta.

One is a club which would have for its primary purpose the social contact and exchange of ideas, which is a purpose of any club; club rooms as a meeting place, for rest, recreation, lectures, the reception of visitors with a message for business and professional women; mutual encouragement, and, finally, the building up of scholarship and similar aims, as well as vocational suggestion, which would help the woman in an uncongenial occupation to something better suited to her ability and taste.

The offer movement, the Business Women's Division of the Chamber of Commerce, has had wide publicity, and is particularly interesting ir that, like the office seeking the candidate, it has gone out after the business women to bring them into organization.

The chamber of commerce, realizing what good material this large group of women citizens included, and what a potentiality would lie in their combined effort for civic interests, brought into sympathy with the idea a few of the business women more prominently known, put the idea to them, secured their co-operation, started into motion a machinery of organization which has proved effective, and the business and professional women are coming together through a membership campaign conducted by themselves.

Among the advantages proposed by the chamber in membership in the business woman's division is the opportunity these women will have of lending themselves in direct co-operation with the 3,000 men into the chamber to forward movements for the city's civic and com-

It will provide an opportunity to learn something of the "give-andtake" of business and a probable stimulus to the individual woman to larger fields of activity.

Particular events which may be pointed to as advantageous ar the annual banquet of the entire chamber of commerce, when the achievements of the past year are reviewed, and tentative plans are laid for the future, forum luncheons once a month, which provide instruction and enjoyment and occasional lectures by speakers from the outside or from the membership of the chamber which give valuable information on commercial and industrial themes.

Questionnaires have been sent out to a long list of business and professional women, asking their views on a business women's division, and what it ought to offer, with suggestive lists of study, instruction, entertainment and civic programs to be checked according to the individual wish or taste of the woman addressed. The consensus of replies will govern the program of the chamber in the first year.

Some of the subjects proposed are: Citizenship training, city planning, education, entertainment, forum luncheon, foreign trade, good roads, health, industrial expansion and relations, membership, pageants, public safety, public utilities, public welfare, production, postal effiiency, publicity, retail trade, sanitation, trade expansion.

The most important advantage the business woman's division offers, however, is the opportunity the women are provided together of developing and finding out their own capacity in organization and the pleasant consciousness that they are an asset to their community.

The resolution reads:

"That the undermentioned societies, believing that great armies and navies are a menace to the peace of the world and an unreasonable burden on the people, urge his majesty's government to do all in its power to achieve a general limitation of armaments, by agreement on the matter with other nations and by promoting a policy of international co-operation whereby the security of states may be assured without resort to force. They further urge that the British representatives at Washington and within the league of nations advocate his policy, and they welcome joyfully the expression of convictions akin to their own from the women of America."

The letter accompanying the resolution is signed by Lady Astor, chairman and president; by Miss Picton-Turbervill, vice chairman, and by Lady Galway, secretary of the consultative committee. eving that great armies and navies

Lady Nancy Astor Women and Good Roads: Broad Program Planned

What women can mean in the promotion and development of public projects of state-wide, sectional, or even nation import, had striking illustration in the meeting Thursday of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, the main theme of which was "Good Roads," with forestry conservation as a supplementary theme of similar and inter-related purport.

There were several facts of prime significance in this meeting. One was that the woman presiding, Mrs. Albert E. Thornton, president of the City Federation of Women's Clubs, holds offices of significance in the development of road building. Mrs. Thornton's appointment as a member of the board of directors of the National Good Roads association, has put a woman on a board which had not heretofore recognized what the direct influence of women in this body could heretofore recognized what the direct influence of women in this body could mean. The appointment was directly built upon Mrs. Thornton's record as Chairman of the Woman's commission of the Bankhead National highway. She had injected into this project an element of popular interest which, it had not hitherto enjoyed, namely, the addition to the value of the Bankhead highway as an avenue of com-merce, the no less important aspect of a great boulevard of historic and esation made his first speech in the in-terest of the $75,000,000 bond issue, which the association seeks to have Georgia pass, before this strong body of women, and that the attorney for the state association presented to the women the legality of the proposed amendment to the constitution bond issue, with a statement of the ting, now that such action is nece sary in order to meet the amended brought out at the meeting by Mrs.

John K. Ottley, that it was the City Federation, in conjunction with the Atlanta chapter of the American Association of Engineers, who fifteen years ago called the first meeting in the south in the interest of forestry, this meeting bringing delegates from many states, and presided over by former Governor Hoke Smith.

The willingness of the speakers to give women the credit for what they have done and can do was most gratifying. Judge Howard, for instance, gave a woman, Miss Berry, credit for the leadership and success of the bond campaign in North Carolina, and paid high tribute to the value of Mrs.
Thornton's work in behalf of good roads. He also built substantially on the offer of Mrs. J. E. Hays, the president of the Georgia Federation of

Two of the points made by Judge Howard that mean most to women are, first, the promotion of the success of the consolidated county schools, which he declares are the best elementary schools in Georgia (those which are al-ready in operation), and will be the builders of Georgia's most representative men and women of the future. Second, the direct avenue which good roads will provide to take the message of the world to the women hitherto Good Roads Picnic.

"A good beginning has been made for our road in the check already re-ceived from the Needle Work guild for a tree in memory of Henry Brown, son of the guild's first president, Mrs. Edward T. Brown. The Atlanta Woman's club has announced that it will plant a tree for all the sons of club they came back or not, and every club diality, through meeting and discussing together these problems that affect us all. This has been recognized in the cordial co-operation we have had from the state department."

Large Audience Welcomes College Extension Lecture

At least 200 people took advantage of the chance to hear the lecture on "Great Britain Today, What She Is Doing, Thinking and Saying," given Thursday by Judge S. C. Williams, dean of the law school of Emory university, and formerly justice of the supreme court of Tennessee. The lecture was given under the auspices of the educational committee of the After the lecture Mrs. Moss asked. of the educational committee of the Council of Jewish Women, of which Mrs. Louis H. Moss is chairman, and was the first of a series of university lectures to be given for the benefit of the people of Atlanta. This remarkable attendance was evidence of the appreciation of Atlanta for the advantage of these lectures which defied the very bad weather.

Judge Williams, who had spent last summer in England, studying the economic conditions, spoke of the really desperate condition in which many of the great landowners of England found themselves. He mentioned the women, accustomed to large incomes, who were suffering silently, too proud to betray their abject poverty. The sacrifice of the great estates and heirlooms of historic furniture and famous paintings under the auctioneer's gavel. In addition to the enormous burden of taxation, the death duties, which amount to one-third of the sum inherited, the huge income taxes, last summer there was an unprecedented drouth in England, which changed "The Green Fields of England," of which everyone has always heard, to brown fields, literally on fire in many cases, caught from sparks from passing trains. summer in England, studying the eco-ng trains.

Judge Williams asserted that under Judge Williams asserted that under this terrific burden of taxation it was only natural for Englishmen to hope that America would "forgive" Great Britain's war debt. Judge Williams said that he had explained that he did not believe such a thing was possible, as the American people were also suffering from large taxes. The interest on the war loans to Great Britain amount to more than all expenditures of their government in 1914.

Asked why the United States does

Britain amount to more than all expenditures of their government in 1914.

Asked why the United States does not do something about the rate of exchange, Judge Williams retorted by asking why England did not do something to equalize values of exchange with France, and conclusion was drawn that the situation was at present fremediable.

England, too, is suffering from the low wages of Germany, and Germany is prepared to go into South America and Mexico with goods at such low prices as to ruin other trade.

Judge Williams was interested in the attitude of the Britisher toward the American. He believes that wille the Englishman feels the slightly superior attitude of the lord of creation that it is not merely towards Americans, but also towards Scotchmen and men of other nations who are not sufficiently lucky to be born English, and he stated that "the American people had risen in the esteem of the English on account of the war and events, which followed the war," until the Englishman has lost his aloofness and is ready to make friends.

Canada is the hope of Great Britain, and the question is whether she will be willing to pay higher prices to her mother country, or whether she will prefer to trade at lower prices with her neighbor, with whom she is extremely friendly, the United States.

After the lecture Mrs. Moss asked if the people of Atlanta really wished the university extension course. She was heartily applauded. Mrs. Emma Garrett Boyd, president of the Drama league, said that there was no question of these lectures being desired, but everyone was anxious to know what subjects would be given after the first three lectures which had been announced. Mrs. Moss asked for suggestions, and Mrs. Boyd said that she had requests from several people for illustrated lectures on art and on literature, with a special request for a lecture on Sidney Lanier.

A very representative audience heard Judge Williams, among them many former Britishers, prominent among whom was Dr. Sterling.

and convincing talk on the advantages to be gained by all the schools in Decatur through co-operation in planning measures for promoting health among the pupils. It was voted to undertake this work, and a committee was appointed to consider ways and means, with a view to perventing at all times the spread of contagion in the schools.

Mrs. Matt Cowan read a set of resolutions petitioning the city manager and commissioners to provide cinder walks leading from the school building to those parts of South Decatur not yet paved. The resolutions were unanimously adopted by the association, and the discussion revealed the fact that better sidewalks would also promote safety, since the children were tempted in bad weather to use the roads and streets.

Mrs. W. V. Whittenberg, chairman of the library committee, reported that her committee had raised $5 to be used to purchase books for the third grade library.

After the business meeting the association was entertained by Mrs. L.

One feature of the meeting which proved most compensating was the conferences held by mothers and teachers in the separate classrooms. The plan seemed especially timely, now that the second part of the school term is well under way.

Oakhurst School Hapeville School Pupils Examined by Miss Shannon

Miss Floy Shannon, Fulton county home demonstrator, supervised the weighing and measuring of the pupils of Hapeville school, which ranks as the first county school to have a thorough examination in order to find out how many children measured up to the standard for school work. Mrs. Thomas Lewis, president of the Parent-Teacher club of Hapeville school, assisted Miss Shannon in the examination thereof.

There are 401 pupils attending this school, and the report of the summary shows that 218 are marked as underweight was made for the entire school.

Special Cases.
One child 7 years old registered 18.6 pounds underweight, which is 30 per cent, and means that the growth of this child is retarded around four years. Another 11 years old was found to be 23.5 pounds underweight, which figures 27 per cent under what he should weigh for his height. A child 12 years of age was found to be 29.5 pounds underweight, which sigured as 26 per cent under the average for a child his height. After working out the system and applying it to the 401 children of the school, it was found that an average of Tenth Street School Parent-Teacher association will meet next Wednesday, January 26, at 3:15.

Mr. Sutton will speak on the "Mid-Year Promotions," a subject of vital interest to parents, as it may soon be introduced in the Atlanta schools.

Mr. Sutton will begin his talk promptly at 3:15 and it is hoped that all members will be in their places by that time.

Selected children from the sixth and seventh grades will repeat the selected tons from grand opera which they sang at Miss Kate Haralson's music appreciation concert, held last Thursday at the Girls' High school.

Tea will be served after the meeting in honor of Mr. Sutton, and an opportunity given all members of the association to meet him.

A large attendance is urged,

The College Park Parent-Teacher association held a meeting Tuesday night, January 17, at the Baptist church, at which the parents, teachers and the older boys and girls of the school were present. One notable feature was the presence of a large number of the fathers.

Prof. W. A. Sutton gave an address on "The Cost of a Life." Benjamin Neely, president of the board of trustees, spoke for the board, and Prof. L. O. Freeman made a short talk on behalf of the school.

At the close of the meeting Mrs. Willingham, president of the Parent-Teacher association, extended a cordial invitation to all to adjourn to the church house for an informal reception. The class chairmen had been particularly active in making possible this open meeting.

The next regular meeting will be held the third Wednesday in February.

Answered by Two Atlantans

In a letter published on The Constitution editorial page of January 13, the school board of Franklin, Ga., made a strong appeal to the public to aid in completing the High School building which was destroyed by fire in 1918, and was not covered by insurance. Bonds were voted in the school district for $15,000, the limit moder law, this covering only one-half of the required amount. The women of the community raised $4,000, and then the men borrowed $7,000, and the building was completed.

The cotton crops were destroyed in 1920-21 by the boll weevil, and the people had a desperate fight to raise money for taxes on their farms, and Heard county has no other interest save that of farming. Now, the people had a desperate fight to raise money for taxes on their farms, and Heard county has no other interest save that of farming. Now, the people from whom the money was borrowed for the school building are calling for same, and on account of the disasters which have befallen the crops for these past two years, it is beyond the power of the people of Franklin to raise the funds.

This school will furnish every boy and girl a high school education, whereas, it would have been impossible for these pupils to have been educated on account of their parents' porty.

Two cash contributions to aid in mying off this debt have been received by the editor of the Parent. Teacher page of The Atlanta Constitution, and forwarded to G. A. Adams, secretary of the school board. Other contributions will be accepted by this department.

30 and 31, under Prof. F. C. Snow, to promote the betterment of Georgia roads, nearing completion, Prof. Snow announced Saturday.

This course is designed to give to practical highway construction men an advanced knowledge of selecting road-building materials in order to prevent the common occurrence of breakdown in roads. Proper selection of materials by road-builders will save the state of Georgia thousands of dollars each year besides assuring the people of the state that their roads will adways be in good condition, according to Prof. Snow.

Announcement of the course has caused considerable interest and already a number have signed up for it. However, the quota of the class is not yet filled, and a large number of applicants can yet be accommodated if they sign up for the course within the next week.

At Keely's-Every Room-Size Rug We Own

Bought at Makers' Sacrifices, Tomorrow a Sale Extraordinary

Makers are holding clearance sales, just as Atlanta retailers are. Getting from under winter stocks-preparing for spring.

These new purchases which arrived Saturday represent the consummation of a deal made by our buyer which rivals anything he has yet accomplished.

Of Soft, Thick Pile Fabrics With Luxurious Fur Collars Worth $75 Worth $49.75

Picture in your mind the most graceful, the most becoming wraps you have seen this season and you will have visualized these coats. Wrappy styles with or without belts, Blouse backs, swagger Raglans-every type of coat .that's Materials are soft, supple Bolivias, rich, deep pile Evoras, velvety Suedines, and other similar cloths, charmingly plain or else richly embroidered or braided.

Fur collars are magnificent, Big, mouffling affairs of beaver, squir-rel, astrakhan, mole and wolf.

Silk Dresses Worth a Third More

wool tricotine, slimly belted with self material or metallic girdles. Some are braided or embroidered; others owe their dash and charm to the many unusual features in cut and trimming. Mostly navies.

New spring dresses. Bouffant taffetas with wee puffed sleeves, tiers and frills. Gay little frocks that one loves to don after bundling up all winter. Canton crepes in soft, drapy effects, sometimes with a rich color note at sleeve or neck. There are too many styles to be able to describe them.

New Silks-

Sprightly Taffetas and Clinging Crepes

IT'S hard to tell which is most popular, taffeta or crepe. For bouffant frocks with their puffings and frills, taffeta has an especial affinity. The crepes go in for the soft, drapy little frocks so much in demand for every occasion.

Colors include all the old favorites-the browns and blues, of course, with a few entirely new to the season. Both for street and

From Regular Stock for One Week Only Cut to the Core

Too many—thousands of dollars tied up in them. Planning to do a big rug business for this week. That's the reason for reducing our stock of high-grade rugs to the lowest minimum. The sale is for this week only. Any rugs remaining after Saturday at six o'clock will be returned to their original prices.

It isn't often you are offered unrestricted choice FROM ONE OF THE FINEST RUG STOCKS IN THE CITY—at reductions so radical. Keely's rugs, as most people know, are marked close to begin with. We can afford to mark them low because the volume of our business is large. And comparative prices are not exaggerated—they are the regular prices these rugs were made to sell for.

THE BREAK IN THE BANK. Congress will, it appears, submit constitutional amendment which, if ratified, would solve the tax-free security problem by requiring that all securities, government or otherwise, be put on the taxable basis.

The fact that so much of the wealth of this country is going into tax-free securities, where it is evading its proportionate share of the cost of government, is undoubtedly responsible, in a large measure, for the tax burden that falls so heavily upon the masses of the people.

To this is largely attributable the business depression of the past

Our cartoonist, Mr. Gregg, has graphically illustrated the situation in the cartoon that appears on the first page of the news section of The Constitution today, in which the wealth of the country, "Capital," is pictured as being a great reservoir whose impounded waters are supposed to flow into and through a powerhouse in which is generated the power that moves the wheels of industry and commerce.

Upon the operation of these industrial enterprises depends the comfort hanniness welfare and prosperity of hundreds of thousands of American homes.

If the power ceases to flow, the wheels of industry stop turning, the factories shut down, affecting everybody who is dependent wholly or in part upon industry for

So long as the power is furnished uninterruptedly, every phase of industrial or human activity-business, schools, social life-goes tain their purchasing power; they are contented and happy in the consciousness of doing well and providing amply for their children; all is cheer, optimism and tranquillity the country over.

But there is a "break in the bank," so the great reservoir, representing the accumulation of capital seeking investment, no longer serves as a storage facility for in-

Through this "break in the bank' -the break of "Tax-Free Securities"-impounded capital, instead factories and industrial plants, is rushing through the gap of taxfree securities; and as it does so the powerhouse ceases to generate the vital fluid to keep industry active, which means industrial and commercial stagnation, unemployment, depression; poverty and

That is the "break in the that must be repaired to insure a return to prosperity.

And until a stop is put to the deflection of capital to tax-exempt channels, and investments of all kinds are put on the same basis as regards taxation—it will be impossible for the country to get back to the condition that would exist if the wealth of the country that is today paid a bonus to stay out of industry were encouraged to invest in it.

THE CHILDREN'S CONCERT Under the auspices of the junio department of the Atlanta Music club, a special children's concert will be given at the Auditorium next Wednesday afternoon, January 25, at 3:30 o'clock, at which time the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra will present an elaborate program specially arranged for children.

This is the fifth year of thes oncerts and during the past two years more than four thousand children attended each concert, the admission to which for children is 25 cents, teachers accompanying their pupils being admitted free.

The fact that the Cincinnati reputation guarantees that the octerest.

The school board recognizing the educational value of these concerts to the school children of the city, has made an exception in the case of selling tickets in the ception made by the board in this tered in Albany.

The parents of Atlanta are urged to take advantage of this rare opportunity for the cultural benefit of their children.

Atlanta was the first southern city to offer such an apportunity to her school children. Even Cinchnati, whose great drchestra is to be here this week, did not offer this advantage to her school children until after Atlanta had paved the way. Now Cincinnati gives these public schools concerts once a month. Savannah followed Atlanta's example last year and other cities are taking similar steps.

The general direction of this wonderful entertainment is in the hands of Mrs. Charles E. Dowman, who heads a committee of the Atlanta Music club, which is directing the program,

This movement should have the liberal support of the public, and the Auditorium should be crowded with the children of Atlanta next Wednesday afternoon.

BANKER AND FARMER.

The January edition of The Southern Banker devotes most of its editorial attention to matters purely agricultural such as cotton men were built of the same type

It very comendably takes the position that "unless the banks of the south get behind the program advocated in the ensuing articles, the severe conditions of the present crop-year will not be speedily relieved."

As The Southern Banker points campaign. out, prosperity is the handmaiden of the measures advocated.

The Constitution has earnestly urged the banker and the supply putting 'more business in govern merchant to see to it that every family has a cow, a litter of pigs, a garden, a pasture, hay crops and grain fields, with cotton a clean surplus, and a secondary money crop in reserve, such as peanuts, sweet potatoes, or any one of a dozen others adapted to varying party opposition that it was disenvironments.

No. Farms. Per Ct. No corn No hay or forage...1,149,733 No Irish potatoes...1,631,640 No eggs 405,184 No brood sow1,152,875

These statistics reveal a condition that must be remedied if the south is to overcome the destruct tive work of the boll weevil.

The farmer, like the business man, wants and is entitled to a fair return on his investment of time, labor and money and if he is unable to get that return by rais trell's table he cannot be expected to turn to them, for his efforts will

Then, and not until then, can we compete, either at home or abroad with competitors who have learned the lesson of co-operation, the value of businesslike marketing, and the hopelessness of the individual trying to market his products profitably.

As The Southern Banker says 'Our cotton gins must be flanked with grain elevators, potato ware houses, creameries, syrup refin eries, and other modern plants of various natures, before the south can realize the fullness of its richest possibilities." To that The Constitution says

UNREDEEMED PLEDGES.

Almost a year of republican rule has passed with not even a visible indication of retrenchment in the cost of government, of which we heard so much during the last

"The administration's scheme of executive reorganization, one of the basic parts of the program for ment," has, says a news report "collapsed, at least for some time."

The dispatch goes on to say that every suggestion that has been made, looking to departmental reorganization, in the interests of economy, has met with such intercarded even before taking form: and that even "Hell-an' Maria" kansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mis- Dawes, the intrepid director of the sissippi, North Carolina, South budget, has virtually given up

In their 1920 platform and dur ing the last presidential campaign 21.0 the republicans promised a whole sale weeding out of surplus job holders, a co-ordination of effort and activity in the government, 37.1 and an administration of business sense and economy.

But to date those pledges are unredeemed. They were good enough as vote-catchers, and served their purpose as vehicles upon which to ride into office.

One of the fundamental faults of our system of government is that once an administration gets into power it is entrenched for four years at least, and the people can do nothing to displace it.

A Question of Viewpoint

Countless pegs grouped and scattered over the globe told the significant story of just how far "Curemail" had carried its benediction to mankind carried its benediction to mankind. That map had a magic power. Before I knew it I was viewing the children of men from the standpoint of "Curemall." Other regions of the earth, however, were not so blest. The pegs told the pathetic story of those who were hard of heart and dull of hearing, so that only a few here and there had been favored. And before I knew it I found tears standing in my eyes, for some great portions of humanity were so benighted that not one single drop of this dew of heaven seemed ever to have fallen upon them.

occasionally a new novel is greeted with a critical chorus unimpeachable in the perfection of its ensemble—occasionally ouly; such an unanimous verdict, for example, informed Chief Engineer William McFee that "Captain Macedoine's Daughter" was uncommonly sincere flattery of the great Joseph Conrad, a fact of which it is extremely unlikely that he was ignored the conference of the confere

The moral of this tale is distressingy obvious-the author of "Cytherea" is inevitably writing against the au-thor of "The Three Black Pennys" and—in my opinion, at least—he comes off rather badly; even the beautiful surface is missing, except, perhaps, in the peerless descriptions of cocktails and champagne. But one's will to live is enormously strengthened by the desire to survive long enough to see what those critics from whom one suffers an inferiority complex, and even those from whom one doesn't, will decree; what will Mr. Francis Hackett, who wrote such an admirable

What, now, was Mr. Hergesheimer trying to express, and how has he expressed it? Even if how has he expressed it? Even if one should go on to the consideration of the value of what he was trying of the value of what he was trying to express, there could be but one answer. For he was confessedly desirous of finding just the place that the goddess to whom young Paris turned from his sheep tending, and to whom he awarded the mischlevous golden apple, the goddess worshipped in Cytherea and in a good many other

And suppressed desires by vicarious galso, they begin to save themselves from lantries—they begin, in short, to ruminate not only aloud, but in print. Miss May Sinclair, to be sure, suffered the same green-sickness in "Mary Oliver" and "The Romantic;" she has happily recovered, as "Mr. Waddington of Wyck" goes to show.

istry, although bringing about an abrupt ending of the Cannes conference, seems so far to have left unaffected the proposed Genoa conference. Since invitations have been issud for March 8 it is fair to conclude that there is soon to be another world conference. But before examining the prospects of such a conference it is necessary to return for a moment to the eternal problem of French politics.

Why did M. Briand fall? The reason is simple. He fell for the same reason that M. Clemenceau lost the French presidency, and his predecessor, M. Leygues, fell, because in the minds of his fellowcountrymen he had made concessions to Great Britain out of proportion to what he had succeeded in obtaining for his own country. More than this, the immediate cause of M. Briand's fall may be found in the history of the Washington conference, where all of the successes were British and most of the reverses French. of the former president of the re-

Briand has dominated the whole world situaresigned at the precise moment when at last he had obtained an alliance long sought by France and regarded as the irreducible minimum of the concessions France must receive before she would consent to participate in the economic reconsruction of Europe. But two circumstances are overlooked, first, the fact that for a year a British alliance has been losing its attraction for France, and, secondly, that this alliance was accompanied by conditions which made it appear danger our rather than desirable to the at last he had obtained an alliance ous rather than desirable to the alliance there is this to be noted: Three years ago at the close of the world war, with the shadow of the German invasion still hanging over their heads, French men clung to the British alliance as the thing which had proven the determining factor in the war; they believed that the alliance which had brought victory in the war would prove equally valuable in peace and that the British and the French policies would march together in the world reconstruction period as they had in the war time. It was in this spirit that Clemenceau negotiated the treaty of guarantee for Irance, signed by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Llyod George, and in return agreed that France should not seek that Rhine frontier which she surrendered after the fall of Napoleon. Three years later, however, France is in a different state of mind. Germany has been disarmed; French armies stand along the Rhine and will remain there for a dozen years to come under the treaty of Versailles. All chance of a German invasion of France in the next decade is negligible. No military man will venture to suggest that Germany can in ten liance which had brought victory in o suggest that Germany can in ter years' time prepare and deliver a serious attack upon France. There-fore a British alliance for ten years actually gives France protection only against an imaginary danger and simply for a period of time in which no attack is conceivable. Twenty, thirty years from now Germany may attack ngain, but the alliance which Mr. Lloyd George offered to M. Briand at Canners would terminate at the end at Cannes would terminate at the end

High Price Paid For Little Gain.

France, then, feeling herself for the noment safe against any German agression asks not unnaturally what re the further conditions attached to are the further conditions attached to this proposed Anglo-French alliance? Here after all is discoverable the im-mediate explanation for M. Briand's fall. To get an alliance of doubtful practical value he seems to have agreed in a large measure to accept th. British view as to the reconstructh. British view as to the reconstruc-tion of Europe and the British view as everybody knows carries with it a great reduction in the sum total of German reparations, a considerable period of postponement of all German payments, and a relaxation of all force and threats of force toward Germany. Thus, from the Poincare point of view. France was asked to pay something serious for next to nothing and the French chamber of deputies seems to have taken the view

Washington, January 21.—(Special.)—The fall of the Briand mintry, although bringing about an abrupt ending of the Cannes contrence, seems so far to have left unaffected the proposed Genoa contrence. Since invitations have been issud for March 8 it is fair to Evade Payment.

Here you touch the third factor in the situation, the German factor. The German believes that he can escape all payment because he percieves that self-interest must lead Great Britain and Italy—and the United States only to a less degree—to work for German economic rehabilitation. He is resorting to every known device to reduce and evade his payments. He is seeking in every possible way by propaganda and otherwise to inflame English, Italian and American opinion against France, He is openly deflant where he dares, and secretly plotting where defiance is inadvisable. He shrows one fact to the Frenchman and another to the Englishman.

Now there, somewhat roughly sketched, you have the situation. England urges upon France a policy with respect to Germany which advantages England and helps the German, but makes no real provision for France. France advocates a policy toward Germany which spells ruin for England, hardship for Italy, and discomfort for the United States. France asks of her recent associates in the war either that to leave her free to act against Germanay or to undertake to guarafi-tee German performance under the terms of the treaty of Versailles. So terms of the treaty of Versailles. So far it has proven perfectly impossible to find a basis of agreement or of compromise and the explanation is fairly simple. It is found in the fact that Great Britain and practically every other nation which signed the treaty of Versailles, except France, sees its interests now from a different point of view from what it did three years ago.

The treaty of Versailles continues to be law. Under the treaty of Versailles, and in return for specific concessions on the French part, the allies of France agreed that France should receive certain things. The sum total of reparations was agreed upontentatively at Paris. It was definitely fixed in May, 1921, after long delays and much discussion and the French claims were therefore sanctioned and the French right to payment in the fixed amount established as the law of Europe.

Now, Germany has become bank-rupt. It is probably true that the rupt. It is probably true that the sums fixed at the May conference were ons and above all recognize the asyms fixed at 1 May conterence were excessive, but they were fixed and to-day France occupies the position of a creditor with a just claim and the concealment of assets, by a manipulation of finance, by a deliberate inflation of currency. In a word, that the German has thrown himself into bankruptey for the puropse of evading payment and remains capable of paying if he wants to. will not and cannot lead to any large immediate payment. France can occupy German territoy: she can seize the cities and mines, but she cannot thereby increase the rate or the amount of German payment. She can accomplish in reality only one thing. She can produce chaos in Germany which may long retard German recovery and thus long postpone the day when France has to fear the consequences of German strength.

Hopelessly Tangled.

ment and remains capable of paying if he wants to.

In the argument between the Englishman and the Frenchman the significant fact is that neither one of them sees the position or meets the argument of the other squarely because each has such great interests of his own at stake. It is a fact that unless Germany gets on her feet a general European improvement is unlikely. It is true that the present paralysis in Europe constitutes a deadly peril for Great Britain, as it constitutes a material handicap to the United States. Millions of men and women are out of work in the British Isles because there is no market for what they were accustomed to produce, and there can be no market until European order is restored. The Englishman therefore sees Europe as a market wherein he must trade to live and he sees the paralysis now existing as the cause of the most acute industrial crisis in his history.

Such was the common interpretation of her action in the matter of the submarine in the Washington conference. What is not so clearly perceived in America is the fact that the world appears to the Frenchman to demand that his country, which made the largest sacrifice proportionate to her largest sacrifice proportionate to her population and her wealth in the com-mon fight against the German, shall make the largest sacrifices now toward When the Englishman talks about restoring Europe, starting the wheels of the world to turning again, he is thinking of that restoration in terms of English necessities. He is conscious profit of her less severely shaken al-

The French gesture is described as one of bold-up. And such interpretation have obviously done much to weaken the French position particularly in the United States. Yet the difficulty in dealing with the whole situation squarely lies in the fact that moral and material interests are inextricably tangled. The Englishman sees the Frenchman promoting economic paralysis in Germany and unemployment in Great Britain for selfish reasons, yet he believes that his own policy, which sees the economic rehabilitation of Germany and of Europe represents the last word in ethical politics. His, own plan for world reconstruction he davocates and presses as the expression of international idealism and moral elevation.

The Frenchman on the other hand sees British policy from the other angle. He sees that if he does the things which Great Britain requires of him Britain will profit. Germany will gain and he will unquestionably lose both directly and indirectly. He perceives that Great Britain was willing to discuss the subject of an alliance with France only when France had successfully maintained in Washington the right to preserve both its army and its navy at a strength fixed by French statesmen. He perceives that the submarine issue in Washington the right to preserve both at the submarine issue in Washington the right to preserve both its army and its navy at a strength fixed by French statesmen. He perceives that the submarine issue in Washington the right to preserve both its army and its navy at a strength fixed by French statesmen. He perceives that the submarine issue in Washington led to the offer of alliance in Cannes, and he perceives with equal clarity that no alliance was offered during all the period between the Paris conference and the present gathering at Washington when France was making concessions.

Now the question which must come to every American mind is: What have we to do with all this mess? The United States would be advantaged, if the markets of Europe were restored. Our chief difficulty now gr of English necessities. He is conscious of the fact that delay in this restoration has brought upon him sufferings of a very acute sort. He is not concerned with any circumstances affecting the German. He simply and frankly wants to get the German situation straightened out because it means work for himself, food for his family and a termination of three years of grave hardship following nearly five years of agony incident to the war. Now the Frenchman's situation is ouite different. The absence of the German market does not affect him. He does not desire to sell in the German market: he does not need a restored Russia as a source of cheap food. What he needs is the reparations sums owed him by the German. If he gets them he can pay the cost of rebuilding his devastated area, the debts which he over him all feets are of rebuilding his devastated area, the debts which he owes his allies, and resider his own domestic financial situation. There is absolutely no profit for him to be found in the mere restoration of Germany to economic health and prosperity.

Therefore, the Frenchman says to the world and has said it was a said it was a said it was a said in the world and has said it was a said it was a said in the world and has said it was a said it

But what can the United States do to promote economic order in Europe? This is the question which must be faced and answered before we send representatives to Genoa if we shall decide to send such representatives. There is a wholly mistaken idea in this country and even in congress that the United States can dictate policies for European application by resolutions put through the senate or the house. There is an idea that because Europe owes us large sums we can dictate to those European countries which are our debtors how large shall be their armies, and what the character and extent of their navies. The truth, of course, is that unless we mean to use our ships and our armies Say Poincare Will Fail.

Those best informed in our present national administration believe that the coming of Poincare to power is a good thing. They believe that Poincare will adopt extreme measures toward Germany and these measures will fail and that, following the failure of Poincare, France will turn to more reseasonable leaders and bring hermore reasonable leaders and bring her-self into line with American and Brit-ish ideas about the German repara-tions. This is obviously possible, per-haps it is likely. On the other hand haps it is fikely. On the other hand it is by no means impossible that France feeting herself isolated, feeling herself unjustly treated and believing that Germany can pay at least a part, a larger part than she means to pay, will resort to the use of that force which lies in her hands and can he exerted without let or hindrance on the part of Europe or the rest of the world. And if France does that, then the economic restoration so essential in view of British necessities and Italian interests will be long postoned if not actually prevented.

In dealing with France both the United Startes and Great Britain seem to me to make the essential mistake of regarding their material intrests as moral factors and of expecting the French to take a similar view. The real trouble lies in the fact that mutual confidence was destroyed at Paris as a consequence of the rejection by the United States of the Paris agreement. We pledged ourselves to give France an alliance of protection and France abandoned her claims to the Rhine. Then we repudiated our prom-Rhine. Then we repudiated our prom-ise and left France bound by hers. Again and again since their French claims in regard to reparations have received the sanction and endorsement of European conferences, but no sooner has France settled down to the belief that she had at last reached the minimum of what she could expect from Germany—than her associates have started out with a new campaign further to reduce this reparation figure. And the result has been the successive crash of the several prime ministers who have guided French politics and without exception have sought tics and without exception have sought o preserve contact and to insure co-peration between France, Great Brit-tin and the United States. Now, Poincare may fail, he may Now, Poincare may fail, he may ain and the United States.

Now, Poincare may fail, he may even fail in getting an effective ministry. The tide may set back toward Briand. But it is worth while recalling that what people are now saying of Poincare they said of Clemenceau when he took office in 1917. It was Caillaux who remarked that Clemenceau would follow Painleve, that he would try to win the war and fail and give way to Caillaux, who would make peace. But Clemenceau won the war. Poincare is by no means as strong a man as Clemenceau; in fact the French opinion of their former president is far less flattering than foreign. We are prone to regard him as a man of iron; a very considerable number of Frenchmen regard him as a painted lathe. Therefore it is even possible that when he sits down at the table with Lloyd George the Welshman will be as successful with him as he has been with all of his predecessors. This will mean the doom of Poincare, but it is not certain that it will mean a reversal of French policy. Believe France

Will Come Across.

The current view in Washington is that in the end the French will come to take the English and the American point of view with respect to Germany. There are endless numbers of many. There are endless numbers of the components produced to support this in the components produced to support the components produced the components produced to support the components arguments produced to support this conclusion. The French policy is deconclusion. The French policy is described and denounced as militaristic, chauvinistic and all the other convenient terms available to suggest madness of a peculiar sort. There is a prevailing opinion that sooner or later that the French will find out that they cannot get reparations in large amounts from Germany and will accept the fact. I confess that I do not share this view. It was just as strongly urged at the Paris conference where all American and British observers agreed in forecasting the speedy deflation of French expectations. But this deflation has not come and the men who have attempted to "sell" the British view of the German question to the French people have fallen in rapid succession, while the French parliament remains com-mitted to the French view. It seems ot me that France is far more apt to wreck Germany, as she can, than quietly to permit German restoration while her own claims are neglected. Poincare may or may not be the man to express this French determination, but I feel certain that

Mr. Lloyd George's scheme for getting Europe on upon the assumption that the United States will furnish the money, the British will supply the brains and Germany will turn over the machinery.

But the British scheme cannot be But the British scheme cannot be realized as long as France retains her present attitude toward Germany. That is why in the Washington conference British policy successfully led Mr. Hughes into an attack, upon France over the submarine, as Mr. Lloyd George at Paris pushed Mr. Wilson against M. Clemenceau in half a dozen different cases. M. Poincare is now going to fight Lloyd George and the chances are ten to one that he will be beaten. But the essential fact remains the same. If he makes compromises he will fail just the way his precessors did.

There have been many ministries in mises he will fail just the way his precessors did.

There have been many ministries in France since the end of the war, but there has been only one definite idea and that has survived every attempted modification. It may be that the present chamber does not represent the temper of the French people and that when a new chamber is elected we shall have a reversal of policy. But since the next election is two years off, this is still a far cry. In the meantime, to succeed, M. Poincare must get something more than a military guarantee covering a period when no military attack is conceivable. And he must avoid paying for such an empty ary attack is conceivable. And he must avoid paying for such an empty guarantee by reducing French claims against Germany, claims which most Frenchmen still believe Germany can pay. This is only another way of saying that for the time being France is thinking in terms of reparations and not largely in terms of a British alliance.

These supply in concentrated form not only the precious yeast vitamines, but all three of the equally important vitamines which Science says you must have to be strong, well and properly developed.

By increasing the nourishing power of what you eat, MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS help supply just what your body needs to feed the shrunken tissues, strengthen internal organs, clear the skin and renew shattered nerve force. Under their influence, many embarrassing skin eruptions seem to vanish as if by magic, leaving the skin and complexion fresh, clear and glowing with ruddy health.

MASTIN'S VITAMON TABLETS do not upset the stomach or cause that bloated feeling; but on the contrary are a great aid in correcting indigestion and constipation. By acting in a natural way as a general conditioner of the whole system they usually help to put on firm flesh and increase energy into a remarkably short space of time.

O'BRIEN MINSTRELS AT ATLANTA THEATER

Famous Organization, on Tenth Annual Tour, Here for Week.

Tomorrow (Monday) and for the rest of the week with matinees Wed-nesday and Saturday, the celebrated Neil O'Brien Super-Minstrels will be seen at the Atlanta theater.

More than ordinary interest centers in this offering, as with the possible exception of the advent of the very biggest circus, no form of entertainment begets more pleasurable anticipation than a reputable minstrel organization, and that the Neil O'Brien Super-Minstrels are recognized as being the unquestionable leader, and the representative minstrel company of America, and have enjoyed this envia-ble distinction for many years, "Min-strel day" is looked forward to as being an event not to be overlooked by seekers of amusement of the clean and wholesome kind.

This will be the tenth annual tour of this organization under the management of Oscar F. Hodge, and it has now come to be regarded as an almost national institution, rivaling in local interest such pretentious of-ferings as the "Follies" and the winter garden shows.

The growth of the Neil O'Brien minstrels has been noteworthy. In its earlier period its success and popularity was principally attained by the larger "one-night-stands," but subsequent seasons have marked its advent to most of the important "weekin most of the important "week-stands" of the east and middle west, and this year the booking powers have assigned the attraction almost entireassigned the attraction almost entire-ly to metropolitan cities. No effort or expense has been spared to make this season's show eclipse all preced-ing offerings in the matter of massive scenic splendor as well as in the per-sonnel of the large company of sing-ers, dancers and comedians, that will contribute their telept and individual contribute their talent and individual ity to furnishing two and a half hours of capricious and hilarious comedy, the kind of dancing that one only sees the kind of dancing that one only sees in a well-regulated minstrel company, and rollicking and inspiring songs and choruses. The entire program, which will be in three parts, comprising part first, an olio of novel specialties and a finale in the form of a fantastic and satirical travesty, in which every member of the company appears, hus all been arranged and personally conducted by Neil O'Brien. The company includes such well-known "burnt cork" favorites as Jack "Smoke" Gray, Pete Detzel and Joe Carroll, Bell and Arliss, Gene Cobb, Fred Miller and Claude Root, Henry Maher, J. Lester Habercorn, Tom Kane, Wally B. Mersercau, George Shone Dan Marshall, Frank "Cracker" Quinn, David D. Morris, Ed. Larson and "Speed" McCarty.

Paul McAllister, the former matinee idol, is wearing a set of whiskers these days that would make a Russian ex-grand duke envious. He had to grow them for a part he is playing in "Man's Weakness," the new picture in which William Farnum will soon be seen. McAllister may return to vaudeville for a few weeks.

MARY MARBLE HEADS LYRIC THEATER BILL

Old Atlanta Favorite Returns in New Sketch, "My Home Town."

There is no doubt that Mary Marble will be the recipient of a most warm-hearted welcome in Atlanta. She and Little Chip were beloved by everyone who ever had the good for-tune to witness a performance of theirs. All the oldtimers remember them from the old Bijou Musical Comedy company and Ponce de Leon park. The younger generation have no dif-ficulty in recalling the fact that for years they were starred on the larger vaudeville circuits in "Old Edam," "The Clock Shop," and other sketches. After Little Chip's death Miss Mar-After Little Chip's death Miss Marble went into retirement. In her friendship ripened and now Miss Marble is presented under Miss Fulton's

There are several other features of this particular program that are prominent because of their unusual nature. Lloyd and Rubin present "Ida Wanna," a little comedy skit that has to do with a pedant who meets his Waterloo in a unique man-

LaFrance and Harris present blackface comedy offering that is full of surprises and novel situations. This team is well known throughout the entire south for their delineations of darky characters.

On Thursday, Friday and Saturday Murray Kissen will be the chief fea-ture in "The Barber of Seville," the former vehicle of the Avon Comeay Four. Allen and Canfield on "Gim-me Me the Makins," have a pleasing novelty, and the program is well rounded out with Martin and Jakil, accordeonists; Cornell and St. John in "Who'll Be the Next One?" and the Joe St. Ogge Trio.

No Use for Babies.

E. A. Warren, who wears an elabo rate beard in "Hungry Hearts," at the Goldwyn studios, found an abso-lutely novel way to remove it. His little 15-months-old baby did it for him, and got much joy out of plucking the hair from the grease paint every Fight by Rounds.

One of the embryo reporters who sat at the ringside during the championship prize fight scene for Wallace Reid's latest Paramount picture, "The World's Champion," not only registered interest in the go between Reid as "Gunboat Williams," and Kid McCoy, the ex-middleweight champion of America, but also wrote the following report of the action:

"Round 1. Both fighters advanced cautiously to the center of the ring. Williams feinted with his left and missed a right swing to the head. McCoy countered with two jabs to the face. Following a clinch McCoy sent a stinging right to Williams' jaw, which rocked the contender. William covered quickly and the round ended with both men sparring for an opening. McCoy fought back, missing a vicious swing to the head. Williams landed a left to the face which closed McCoy's right eye. He followed this with two wicked body blows. At the sound of the gong McCoy appeared worried.

"Round 3. Williams kept up his hammering tactics. He landed left to the body and a right to the head. McCoy repeatedly forced a clinch, but was at a disadvantage in the infighting, Williams getting in some telling short jabs to the body. "Round 4. At the beginning of the round Williams caught McCoy with a crashing right which sent the champion's head back. The contender followed up the blow with a rain of body punches which put McCoy in misery. Following a clinch Williams landed an uppercut to the jaw which sent the champion to the mat for the count of nine. Pandembnium broke loose in the stadium. The crowd cheered for Williams to end the fight. When McCoy staggered to his feet Williams rushed at him, swinging viciously. He sent the champion down with a right smash to the jaw and the fight was over. A new middleweight champion of America was proclaimed while the cameras clicked merrily on."

The proper attire of Theodore Kosloff, who plays a leading role, that of a young Frenchman filled with enthusiasm for the ald traditions of his race, was a case in point.

He couldn't dress in the costume of the old nobility, for the play is modern. Yet how else could he indicate his predilection for such things?

After much consultation, a compromise was effected on a modern suit of gray, a velvet smoking jacket used in place of the regular coat, and a very ornate fancy vest of brocade made from rare old material in replica of a vest of a good many generations back. The latter gave the desired touch of quaintness. In other scenes he wears a Pince Albert coat, but that fancy vest is his badge, so to speak, of character distinctiveness.

In this picture Miss Murray portrays the part of a Parisian dancer, who, as the darling of the famous city of pleasure, is feted and adored for her daring and artistic creations. She falls in love with a youthful American, a small town boy, and goes back to his home only to find that the people of the little village are scandalized at his French wife. The rude awakening among the bright lights of Broadway gives this story a turn which makes it one of the most dramatic offerings of the screen.

"Peacock Alley" is typically a Mae Murray picture. Its gorgeous settings and the costly costumes of the star are outstanding features in an offering which at its special showing in New York won the unstinted praise of the critics as being the most beautiful and gorgeous production of the screen. The cast supporting Miss Murray is a most notable one and includes Monte Blue in the leading male

Perhaps there are some bashful lovers who wouldn't care about getting quite so forceful as that. But it's a mighty successful method on the screen.

Even Rogers as "Romeo" during a part of the action is more courtierlike than that. For instance, in the balcony scene, he says to Sylvia Breamer as "Juliet."

"Juliet, thou not only hast a wonderful balcony, but thy cellar is a knockout."

first feature production of Holman Day, presented by Associated Exhibitors and showing at Loew's Grand, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, has found within itself a theme that burns with the inspiration of actual human experience and emotion.

It is the theme of the big outdoors, the great Maine woods, the roaring cataracts. The intertwining of these great emotional, though inanimate, actors with human beings strong in tourage, or weak in cowardice, presents a story tense and gripping in its majesty.

The action of the story revolves about the efforts, by fair means or foul, of a powerful corporation to rob old "X.K." "The Rider of the King Log," of his river rights. Old "X.K." is a mighty rugged so of the forest with a tender spot in his heart as hig as all out-doors for his motherless daughter.

Death overcomes "X. K." and he faces it as courageously as he faced life, but his dauntless spirit lives on in his daughter, who fights to the finish and wins through love.

Frank Sheridan, Richard Travers, Irene Boyle, Carleton Brickert, Arthur Donaldson, Charles Slattery, and many others were chosen by Holman Day himself, to portray the characters he knows so well.

Most of the great spectacles that have been given to the screen that human experience and emotion.

So there is the intense, the really great drama as the central point around which the screen production has been built. As a stage offering it was a sensation, but critic after critic has pointed out that Sardou ihmself could little have dreamed of the magnificence with which his drama would some day be placed before the public. The cast of 25,000, the immense sets that set a new mark in puolic. The cast of 25,000, the immense sets that set a new mark in spectacles, the millions that have been spent in the production have afforded a background that not only amazes, but makes the story itself stand out all the stronger.

Dorothy Dalton and the company making "Tharon of Lost Valley." a Paramount picture, under the direction of Paul Powell, have returned to the company's west coast studio after a week on location at the Lasky ranch, where most of the exterior scenes for the picture were filmed.

Just to prove to the skeptics that a "heavy" can play other parts, E. J. Brady, who always has been cast in villain roles, gives one of the cleverest characterizations of his screen career as the constable in "If You Believe It. It's So," a Paramount picture starring Thomas Meignan, to be released soon.

HOW SOUTHWEST MET AND OVERCAME THE RAYAGES OF THE BOLL WEEVIL!

Farming Under Boll Weevil Conditions as Practiced in Texas, Arkansas, Mississippi and Louisiana Being Investigated by The Atlanta Constitution

James A. Hollomon, Washington correspondent and known throughout the South as a thorough and painstaking analyst, is now in the Southwest studying how cotton planters of that section mastered the greatest problem that ever confronted them, and will tell the readers of The Constitution the ACTUAL PRAC-TICE of these planters in growing normal crops of cotton despite the pest that for three years swept them clean---

ARTICLES WILL BEGIN JANUARY 25

The cotton growing states of the Sou theast are confronted today with the most serious problem since the civil war.

It is the boll weevil. It can be met. It must be.

Talk as much as we may about diversification of crops—and there should be a diversification to the extent of supplying the home markets; and the growing of food and feed for the farmer and his tenants, but the fact remains that cotton, the king of American products, must continue to be, as it has in the past, the money crop of the South. There is no getting away from that fact!

A farmer cannot live and prosper without actual cash in the bank with which to pay his obligations; provide the luxuries of life that the soil will not provide; educate the children; travel, if need be; and, above all, establish that saving nucleus with which to build for the future—for that inevitable time when the hand will be stilled by death, or the earning capacity weakened by age.

No Prosperity Without a Money Crop

There can be no prosperity without a money crop; and years of experimenting have developed that there is no money crop in the South equal to or even aproximating the great white staple—the equivalent of currency in every market of the world, under normal peace conditions—unperishable, unshrinkable, and untrammeled by substitute competition. Raise hogs and cattle? Yes!

He is an improvident farmer who imports his meat from the west.

Raise the best there is to be raised, and raise it cheaply, for home consumption, and to sell. Raise chickens? Yes; to eat and to sell, and raise them profitably.

Raise vegetables? Yes; for the home table and perhaps for the home or outof-state market, if conditions warrant. Raise grain and hay? Yes!

He is an improvident farmer who imports the meal for his bread from Iowa. or the corn and hay for his stock from Illinois.

But it is not every farmer in the South who can raise corn or alfalfa or wheat to a cash profit, even if an established market should be at hand.

Indeed, there are few of the smaller farmers who can do so, try as best they may, and work as hard as they may.

Nature Provided Sectional Staples

Not every section will grow these products to an advantage. Nature provided that different products should hold a mastery in different sections. God was wise in His distribution of climatic conditions; and of the seasons; and of soil conditions.

If all sections were suited to corn as a money crop there would be no commercial demand for corn. And the same is true of wheat, cotton, and all along the

The great, treeless plains of the Northwest, where the sun shines for fourteen and eighteen hours a day during the cropping season; where the winters are bleak and the summers dry and warm—there God intended should be the wheat area of the North American continent; and there it is.

In the semi-tropic areas of the South Atlantic and Gulf, where frost is unknown in winter, and heat prostration unknown in summer—there God intended should be the citrus fruit areas, and the early vegetable areas from which strawberries should gladden the Christmas table in the East.

God Intended the South To Be the Cotton Zone

But the great agricultural South, Georgia, the Carolinas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, God intended should be the cotton producing zone of the continent—indeed of the world—and cotton always will be the cash crop of this section. There is no use to try to dodge that conclusion. It can't be done.

But the boll weevil has thrown his cruel fangs into the situation, and is costing the cotton farmers of the South Atlantic states alone near on to a billion dollars a year. Farmers have become panic-stricken at his ruthless invasion. And well they may be.

He has laid the farms in waste; dissipated every vestige of yield; and strewn his battlefields with the wreckage of ruined homes and broken hearts.

Perhaps a sadder story has never been written than that of the financial depression that has followed the insidious little pest that crossed the Rio Grande just fifteen years ago, and that invaded Georgia, to appreciable extent, less than five years ago. In 1921 the weevil stalked forth in the great cotton producing areas of middle, and north of middle Georgia like an unconquerable army maddened by the victories of war, and millions of dollars in this one area in Georgia yielded in one year to his arrogant ruthlessness.

Georgia Must Profit by Experience of Southwest

This condition must not continue. It is not necessary that it should; and if Georgia permits the boll weevil to conquer it, even as a producer of cotton, the king of all money staples, it will deserve to fall out of the march of progress—to yield its proud position as the Empire State of

IT WILL NOT DO IT! Can cotton be grown successfully under boll weevil conditions? ABSOLUTELY SO!

When the weevil slipped into Texas from Mexico in 1907 the farmers of the great cotton empire were seized with panic.

They had no light to guide them, for Mexico is not a potential cotton produc-

They began to fight, but it meant experimenting in an uncharted channel. For four years the inroads of the pest became greater and greater, and the normal crop of 4,000,000 bales in 1906 was reduced to 2,500,000 in 1909, with an acreage increase of nearly 1,000,000 acres.

In 1910 conditions began to get better. They could see a light in the cloud. Their war against the weevil's presence had not been successful; but they began to learn how to grow cotton in spite of the weevil.

They kept their experiments up, discarding the worthless, improving the meritorious; and today Texas, under normal crop conditions, grows cotton to the old-time profit, with the weevil present but outlawed.

Louisiana Procrastinated and Then Learned the Lesson

In Louisiana the same story may be told.

Following the frailties of man, the Louisiana planters procrastinated, hoping against hope that the weevil would be satisfied with Texas for a battlefield.

All of a sudden he invaded that state, and then across the Mississippi river into eastern Louisiana and Mississippi.

The farmers of these states began to fight, and, profiting by the lessons learned from Texas, in three years they mastered the pest, and today in Louisiana and in the great Mississippi delta the cotton planters know how to grow cotton in spite of Shall Georgia and the Carolinas profit by the proven experiences of the states to the southwest, that have learned how to raise cotton under holl weevil conditions? THAT IS THE POINT OF THIS STORY!

More That Is Practical and Less Theory Needed

Tons of literature, and "scientific bulletins" have been written in Washington, and by entomologists and theorists throughout the south about the boll weevilthe Latin name that describes him in a big lexicon, his modes of living, feeding and all such, including the whole evolution of the insect from the egg, through the larva into the pupa, and then into the full-grown cotton enemy that he is.

Tons of bulletins have been written about the hibernations of the weevil, disposition, progeny, and so on.

Tons of bulletins have been written about this experiment and that experiment as to extermination, etc.

But what the farmers of the southeast want to know, or should know, HOW DO THE COTTON PLANTERS OF TEXAS AND LOUISIANA, AND MISSISSIP-PI AND ARKANSAS GROW A NORMAL PRODUCTION OF COTTON UNDER BOLL WEEVIL CONDITIONS, OR IN SPITE OF THE BOLL WEEVIL?

Conditions in Southwest Same As in Southeast

Climatic conditions are practically the same. Seasons are almost similar. Soil analysis prove up almost identical— Then, if the farmer of central Texas can raise cotton profitably with the boll weevil, why not the farmer of central or north Georgia?

If the planter of the Mississippi delta can grow cotton profitably without the boll weevil being an annihilating menace, why not the farmer of south Georgia?

That is exactly what The Atlanta Constitution proposes to find out for its readers. James A. Hollomon, Washington correspondent of The Constitution, and known throughout the south as one of the most careful and thorough analysts who has ever gone to the very bottom of any great subject, and dissected it, as is his custom, is now in Texas investigating for the readers of The Constitution this very subject. He will go from Texas into the cotton areas of Louisiana and Mississippi and Arkansas.

Hollomon's Boll Weevil Studies Begin January 25.

Mr. Hollomon will tell, in a series of plain, practical, simply expressed articles, to begin Wednesday, January 25, just how the cotton planters of the southwest have solved this—the most serious financial problem that has ever confronted the states of the southeast.

He will analyze the production, in selected areas, from the first appearance of the weevil until the present time, together with the stages of control, and HOW THE CONTROL WAS FINALLY ACCOMPLISHED.

Mr. Hollomon, and everybody knows this to be his established reputation, will deal only in facts; and facts as established by general practice in these states, in dealing with this problem.

His articles will be so plain and practical that a child can understand them, and in bringing the light of mastering experience to the very farm gate of every cotton planter in the southeast, this series on "Farming Under Boll Weevil Conditions, As Practiced in Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana Alabama and Mississippi," will no doubt be one of the most constructive, effective and far-reaching undertakings ever attempted by any newspaper in the south.

thankless British task of making black savages into useful citizens of the empire.

"He was acting consul, vice consul, consul general, etc., for one African region and another. Finally when he was about sixty years old he returned to England," and it was then that he began the work which was nearest his heart—the art of fiction.

His latest book, "The Man Who Did the Right Thing," is a very strong story in which the author does not mince matters "regarding the ignorance of the 'chapel connection' by which the missionary enterprise is conducted."

The heroine is an English girl ho marries a missionary to Africa and when she lands in the land of fleas, cockroaches and all kinds of rats, and, after having had a pleasant voyage, made pleasanter by Captain Roger Brentham, a man with an attractive personality, she is not so enthusiastic over her missionary lover and his work, though she does her best to perform her duty. Shortly after in a battle with an enemy tribe John Baines meets a martyr's death. Later Robert Brentham, now consul of the region, marries the widow of John Baines, and from this time the incidents happen thick and fast.

The story has been a most popular piece of fiction and if the reader will read between the lines he will find that the author has blended many thrilling incidents with the love story of English characters in an African land. It is a love story by one who knows and it is the best story that he has written. (The MacMillan Company, New York.)

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD.

God's Country—The Trail to Happiness. By James Oliver Curwood, author of "The Valley of Silent Men." "Flaming Forest," etc. The cover to this little volume presents a very attractive picture to the nature lover and the tired business man—it is a little cabin 'way out yonder in the great northwest—in the wilderness and the great snows that gives a man the touch of nature that he needs, and of which Curwood says:

"The great goal I wish to achieve is to take my readers with me into the heart of this nature. I love it, and I feel that they must love it—if I can only get the two acquainted."

Of this book the publishers say: JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD.

Of this book the publishers say: "This is the strangest thing James Oliver Curwood has ever written; one of the most beautiful messages one of the most beautiful messages of hope ever addressed to mankind. It tells of the faith of a happy man who wants everybody else to be happy. Mr. Curwood has learned life and he has also learned to love and live life."

The last chapter is entitled "The Road to Faith," the words of which mean a great deal to the reader. (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

Stewart, with many delightful droll drawings by Herb Roth. The publishers are very enthusiastic over the sales of the book and of which they write: "The gentle art of poking fun. of humorous and witty and satiric 'joshing' is all too rare in this country.

And for this reason the readers of this delightful book must not restrain their enthusiasm when reading the author's "take-offs" on American history.

Among the interesting chapters are "Main Street, Plymouth, Mass."
"In the Manner of Sinclair Lewis"

THE BEST PLAYS OF 1920-1921.

Burns Mantle, dramatic critic of The New York Evening Mail, has contributed a most interesting volume to the readers of literature, of the drama and to all the dramatic clubs, entitled the "Year Book of the Drama in America."

This is Mr. Mantle's second volume and the reader will find the introduction too valuable to overlook. He discusses the season in New York with special reference to the impression of the Hungarian nlay, "Lilliom" and of 'Sir James Barrie's "Marv Rose," which, while a cuccess in London, was a failure in America. Frank Craven's "The First Year" has been credited as being the best light American comedy, with "Enter, Madame," close without mentioning "Miss Lulu Bett" and "Mr. Pimm Passes By." He discusses very interestinely the plays that have run over five hundred performances on Broadway—also giving the cast and synopses of plays produced in New York in 1920-1921. (Small, Maynard & Co., Boston, Mass.)

ONE BOOK.

Owen Wister, writer, with the assistance of George Howe, illustrator, has contributed one of the most unique books of the season. It is entitled "Indispensable Information for Infants," or it can be called "Easy Entrance to Education." (Publishers, MacMillan Company, New York.)

Mr. Wister, who is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters and corresponding member of the Societe' des Gens de Lettres, in a very serious moment compiled this collection of humorous verses epitomizing the deeds and "hits off the folibles of the great from George Washington to John Philip Sousa."

Mrs. Catherine McCabe, 414 Dickens Ave., Scranton, Pa., said: "The 'flu' left my little Regina in such a bad condition that I have no idea she would be with me now if it hadn't been for Tanlac. It is a mystery to me how she lived on the little she was eating and was so lifeless she never even cared to play with the dolls and toys she got at Christmas. Since taking Tanlac she is as hardy and well as any child could be and has gained 15 pounds in weight. I will always praise Tanlac for restoring our little girl's health."

Richard Leary, 2342 Palethorpe St., Philadelphia, said: "There is no doubt in my mind but that Tanlac saved my little boy's life. For two years I wouldn't have been a bit surprised to have seen him drop off at any time. He had stomach trouble and many a time the gas pressed up Among the celebrities to whom a pays his respects are Admiral me, Henry Cabot Lodge, William annings Bryan, Josephus Daniels, ewton D. Maria Chapdelaine. A Tale of the Lake St. John Country. Translated by W. H. Drake. The author of the story, Louis Hemon. Is a Frenchman, who located in the great Canadian northwest, away in the wilds of Quebec, where he lived for a year and a half. It was during the intervals of his busy days and nights that he wrote this story of Maria Chapdelaine, the daughter of a Canadian pioneer, whose lover, Paradis, the trapper, is lost in a Christmas snowstorm, and of her indecision between two other lovers.

The solitude of the great frontier had made her restless and discontented, but she finally decided not to leave her own people. Mr. Hemon has written a wonderful romance—a romance of life in the lonely places.

Pelham Edgar writes in the Literary Review that the story is like a poem, is almost all sensation and picture, and no false note disturbs the harmony. (The Mac-Millan Company, New York.)

Julia Takes Her Chance. By Concordia Merrel. This is a story of a girl who ventured to make a name for herself and the result of it. It is full of thrills, excitement and is very interesting. (Thomas Seltzer, publishers, New York.)

Mile High. By Henry C. Rowland. Nita Heming was voted the beauty of Denver and was also the most popular giri in her set. Among the many lovers was Chris Carmichael, an aviator. When he realized that she was indifferent to his good looks and aeroplane he did an extraordinary thing!

The story is full of thrills on land and in sky—there is a thrilling airplane chase which placed Chris at the head of all Denverheroes if not first among Nita's lovers.

heroes if not lirst among these lovers.

But Chris was not easily ruffled; he did not bear the title of being the most impatient of Nita's suitors, but, on the other hand, he was very much in love and believing in the old proverb "Everything will come if a man will only wait"—he waited. The story is most entertaining. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

MAIN STREET.

"Why did you write 'Main Street?" was asked Upton Sinclair in New York recently.

"Frankly," he replied, "perhaps more than anything else just to get it out of my system.

"I had been writing stories for the money that was in themstories that I knew would please the public—and at last I decided to write the truth about American life just as I knew it. I did not expect it to bring me in even a copper cent, and I did not care; I meant to write it just to get it out of my system."

"Main Street" has made Mr. Sin-clair famous as an American au-thor. From the very beginning it was ranked as a "best seller" and it is still selling.

who wants everybody else to be happy. Mr. Curwood has learned life and he has also learned to love and live life."

The last chapter is entitled "The Road to Faith," the words of which mean a great deal to the reader. (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

Enos A. Mills, the well-known naturalist, is a great admirer of James Oliver Curwood, and after reading "God's Country," made the following statement:

"It carries appreciation of nature at its true worth. It is a story of man and nature; it has the calmness and counsel of an old man, the urge, the eloquence and the action of a young one. Curwood has lived wisely and writes like a lover."

In speaking of "Flaming Forest," by Curwood, President Roosevelt said:

"I have read with great interest Mr. Curwood's book, "The Flaming Forest," It is excellent. It is good clean adventure in the 'open spaces.' I am thoroughly sick of the soul-searching obsenities of many of the modern novels. It is fashionable now to pile complex on reflex ad lib until the reader becomes hopelessly lost in a maze of introspective speculation. Personally, I believe that action as a rule springs from simple motives." Mr. Curwood's book is a story of adventure, well told and robust.

DAN BEARD.

American Boys' Book of Wild Animals (Woodcraft Series). By Daniel Carter Beard. Profusely illustrated. As all boys love Dan Beard and as they know he loves them, his new book will be given a very warm welcome.

Another thing all boys know, and Kathleen Norris, who truthfully can be called "The Beloved Woman," tells about her first story in a book entitled "My Maiden Effort" Happened to Alanna." The story is very interesting.

Booth Tarkington says that in writing "The Flirt" he wrote next that is that Dan Beard is the founder of the "First Boy Scouts" society and author of many interesting books. He is the national scout commissioner for the Boy Scouts of America, and next to Sir Robert Baden-Powell there is probably no man who is so close in touch with the work of this wonderful organization.

Dan Beard I know would liked to have carried all the boys with him on his wonderful trip in the wilds, but as this could not be, he has done the next best thing to it, he has written a book of incident and adventure, filling it with stories of bears, wildeats, deer, etc., not forgetting the small furry things that seek shelter at the sound of a huntsman's footsteps.

The author, who is affectionately called "Uncle Dan," has spent most of his life in the open and knows as much about wild animals as any hunter and has more interesting and exciting stories to tell boys, and knows better how to tell them, than perhaps any other writer. (J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.)

WORLD TRAVELER.

The World Traveler, which goes everywhere, not only gives the boys and girls, but the men and women, a trip to every land. The cover design for January is that ideal land in the winter time—Florida—the frontisplece, "Winter Sports in Summer Climes," and "Where Winter Is No Enemy," is a most interesting article written by Helen Oliver around the old city of Charleston, with illustrations of the Magnolia Gardens, etc., and presenting an old colonial residence; for which the city is noted.

And then to Florida travels the pen of the author, including illustrations in St. Augustine, Key West, Miami, St. Petersburg, where several noted authors are spending the winter, among them being a prominent Savannah author, Mrs. Marie Oemler, and several noted writers from New York as well as millionaires who are enjoying the climate that inspired the palmetto and the pine, Palm Beach, Miami and other beautiful illustrations are included.

Jean Stanley writes an interesting article, "New London to Miami by Motor," sketches by Norman Borchardt; "In Our Own Bit of Old France," by Grace McKinstrey, illustrated; "Treasure Islands, Old and New," by Amy Lyman Phillips, which will carry the reader around "this old world we're livin' in" and make the long winter evenings one of special entertainment at home.

The effect of Tanlac on the delicate stomachs of the young is one of the strongest evidences of its wholesomeness as well as its unusual merit. Although a powerful reconstructive. Tanlac contains no harmful ingredients, minerals or opiates which are so often found in other medicines. Being composed of the most beneficial roots and herbs known to science it is purely vegetable and can be taken by the most delicate children, and does not upset or injure the weakest or most delicate stomach.

faculty had a party a few weeks ago. All the staid old profs shed their classroom crusts and pretended they were off on a rousing holiday at Monte Carlo, risking and making fortunes on the roulette wheel. Several profs became multi-mil-lionaires that night, in imagination, in imagination. Crazy cream.

The next morning they woke up and went about their usual boresome business of drilling knowledge into the domes of the young. The roulette wheel that they had been playing with they hid away down in a storeroom in the basement of a college building.

A week or so later it was noticeable that whenever they had a leisure period the students were finding their way to the basement. Something was going on underground.

Ye gods, that roulette wheel! The fac-ulty suddenly remembered it.

The janitor and certain professors raided the basement in righteous wrath. The students found gathered about the game were reported to the proper committee, Later they were severely lectured concerning the loss of their souls incident upon their engaging in gambling, and were suspended from school.

A favorite Christmas present last year, so it appeared, was a chest of games that included a roulette wheel, poker chips, several decks of cards, chessmen and board, checkers, dominoes, dice. The Wooing of Lady Luck popularity with the "Jazz crowd." But there has been no period of human history and no nation that did not know dice. Somewhere about 1244 B. C., Palamedes, a Greek hero and man of learning, is sup-posed to have invented them, but long before that cubes with numbers on each side, like put-and-take dice, instead of dots, had been used for the same purpose.

Everywhere people are turning to games of chance. The whole American family is seeking the hand of Lady Luck. Some are winning, but they are little happier than those who lose, for those whose pockets are emptied by the gambling craze have found a new freedom from the festraint of reason. This article, written after long research, paints an ugly, fearsome picture. Is the American nation whirling gayly, careening madly down the toboggan that led Babylon and ancient Rome to oblivion? You may not like the story Miss Wilson pens, but it's composed of facts—facts that can't be sidestepped.

Old Egypt murmurs through her stony lips, "I knew these things three thousands years ago."

Clearly the playing with dice is not one of the lamented lost arts. Nor has this spirit of jazz been unknown to the world before. This unsettled excitement-craving.

Part of War Reaction.

J UST now the world is upset, recovering from a war. There are many worries and anxieties in the minds of men and women. In jack they lose themseives for the time being, and so in gambling.

Judge Samuel H. Silbert, a Cleveland man who keeps his finger on the pulse of public thought and conduct, says he has noticed the prevalent popularity of games of chance ever since the close of the war.

"It is human nature to gamble," says he. "People want excitement and many of them find this form of pleasure in games of chance. There is much playing of cards evenings at home."

Lieutenant Cornelius Cody, now at the ead of the Cleveland police department's vice squad, declares that professional gamation that money can buy. Thus it follows that we find lovers of gambling in all classes of society. Most Criminals Gamblers.

It IS easily admitted that an absolutely ordered (however well ordered) human life would be vacant of interest and intolerable. In other words, it is a prime condition of humanity that the unexpected in the form of happening and achievement should be adequately represented in every life. Where the physical or mental exhaustion of industry or other external conditions prevent the due cultivation or the expression of wholesome art or play instincts, baser attractions usurp their place. It is impossible and it would be undesirable to deny to man the satis-

"Noisy" means "lazzy."

"My husband and I used to belong to a group of professional men and their wives who met together evenings once in a while, played cards, had refreshments, sang and conversed. Now we don't dare to accept an invitation to one of their evenings," a woman said to the writer re-cently. One of the off-heard objections to the "new gambling," that of the put-and-take variety, is that it does not exercise the mind as do the old forms. The plays do not have to be reckoned out. The letter "T' comes up on the dice, and that means "take" rake it in. For this reason, put-and-take has been called a "thinkless"

There are said to be three incentives There are said to be three incentives towards gambling. One is the following of the fashion or fad. The second is the wish for excitement, for the feeling that one is alive. The third is the desire for gain without having to work for it.

It has been pointed out by B. Seebohm Rowntree, author of "Poverty," that the wealthy suffer from a monotony of surfiet and the poor from the monotony that rises from the lack of advantages or recre-

The worst thing about gambling is that it means the denial of the fact that the it means the denial of the fact that the natural foundation of the right of property is human effort or labor. Getting something for nothing is always bed for one's character. It is likely to make one avaricious, reckless and lacking in a sense of honesty and justice as regards property. It is more than likely to make a man callous as to the sufferings or misfortunes of others, since every time he gains someone else suffers by it.

"In the making of a het a men resolver

"In the making of a bet a man resolves to repress the use of his reason, his will, his conscience, his affections; only one part of his nature is allowed free play and that is his emotions," a writer on ethics has stated.

Gambling is actually a passion when it becomes a habit with a man. It is uncontrolled emotional excitement, the opposite of rational control, upon which civilization has been built up. This control is only imperfectly established even in the most highly civilized man. Nevertheless it is the key to human progress.

Gambling is thus a reversion to a sav age state of mind. It is demoralizing. The many superstitions conected with it prove this. For instance, "beginner's luck," the belief that turning a chair or changing seats breaks a round of bad luck, or that in a game of rouge-et-noir played on the roulette wheel or with cards, if red has come up twenty times the twenty-first time will bring black. This brings to mind the superstition that in dice throwing it is impossible to throw seven ten times in succession; also the historic fact that in 1812 a certain Mr. Ogden bet his opponent 1,000 guineas that he could not throw seven ten successive times, and that his opponent succeeded in doing it nine times running. belief that turning a chair or changing running.

"The fevered excitement of the gambler is part of an exaggerated reaction against certain excesses of orderly routine imposed upon the life which he lives," Rowntree writes. "The dull, prolonged monotony of writes. "The dull, prolonged monotony of uninteresting drudgery which constitutes the normal workaday life of large masses of people drives them to sensational reactions which are crude and violent. The factory employee, the shop worker, the office clerk, the most typical members of modern industrial society, find an oppressive burden of nninteresting order, of mechanism, in their day's work. The roulette wheel that made Monaco famous is now found in the American home, mounted on mahogany to match the furniture, a best seller this season at $50, somewhat more than a foot in diameter. The disc is revolved, and a small ivory ball is thrown off into one of thirty-seven or thirty-eight compartments surrounding it, numbered from 1 to 36, with one or two zeros. If you have staked up the num-ber of the compartment into which the ball falls receive thirty-six times this stake; less if you have staked more than one number. There are also other

Even the simple lottery holds much of the fascination of gambling. There is a story told of an upstate New York man, a ruralist, who had never gambled in his life except at a church social, when he took a chance in a lottery for a turkey.

This farmer was on a two weeks' visit to friends in the metropolis. Along to-wards the end of his stay his host invited him to go with him one night to see some of the more exciting phases of city life, the upper part of the underworld.

Among the places visited was a gambling establishment of some elegance where the farmer became mightily interested in the game of faro bank which was being played by a group. He joined them, lost what money he had with him, borrowed from his friend, lost that, and finally put up his false teeth and lost them as

He put his hand affectionacly on the erm of the proprietor. "In two weeks I'll come back again."

The old farmer felt that the excitement of the game had well repaid him for losing. He had been "jazzed" out of a cut and he liked it. Many men gamble to have the feeling of finding some generally unuced parts of their natures. Too often they lose themselves, however.

THE DAUNTLESS LYSANDER by Winona Godfrey

A diamond and platinum chain, value $10,000! They stood staring at each other. Then Lysander wet his lips and whispered: "Where'd you get it?"

"You know," her Jips formed.

Henrietta Was His Only Heritage; Then Along Came Phyllis, and Trouble, and Amy.

FTER Aunt Jane died Lysander had begun to feel pretty tired of Iowa. Which was well, it seemfor there had been someting very like invitation in his Cousin Asa's voice as he knocked out his pipe on the porcharail.

"Well, Lys, I guess the car'll just about figure out what's comin' to you out of ma's stuff."

of ma's stuff."

If he hadn't been feeling sad about Aunt Jane, who had been good to him always, Lysander would have uttered a whoop of derision. The "car" was good! From where he stood he could see its scarred carcass in the shed, a flivver of about the vintage of 1913, driver's side sagged from Asa's two hundred pounds, making it look as if it were tired and was resting one foot while it leaned up against the weather. It was tired, there was no doubt about that, and only Lysander's continuous tinkering (a thing seeming positively inspired at times) persuaded it occasionally to saunter along the road to town.

Lysander understood Asa, who had never liked him much, and meant now that Lysander would not be passionately regretted if he "moved on." Lysander had indeed were lard, by no means infrequently, why he stayed. Now the only tie was broken, and to his suddenly eager eyes the lopsided Henrietta appeared a champing steed prancing to be off, the westering sun altar fire of a long beckoning goal.

This does not happen to be a tale of any adventures of the long trail west. These paragraphs serve merely as a sketchy background to that fateful afternoon when Henrietta, after many vicissitudes, limped into a garage in a suburb of Los Angeles, and seemed to declare with a little bleat her intention to expire right there. Many times had Henrietta threatened to give up for good, but that dauntless tinkerer, Lysander, had always received and passed on to her some timely inspiration from the god of mechanicians which enabled her to proceed, if not with swiftness and elan, at least enabled her to proceed.

Lysander alighted from his ailing charlot and administered with a practiced hand to its decrepitude, turning a grin and a deaf ear to the ribald comments of the garagemen. It was then—as he emerged dirty but triumphant—that it happened. A big car, all windshields and disk wheels and nickel and seventeen kinds of dewdads, whisked so lightly into the garage that it arrived with the very sound of its warning signal, missing Lysander by half an inch and Henrietta by less than half that, so that her poor old bones fairly jingled, though she was untouched.

The two ladies in the car squealed a little, and the important looking gentleman growled something, and the dapper chauffeur gave Lysander a basilisk glare. Our hero, seeing that he had been missed, barely smiled. The party scorned to notice him further, and devoted its attention to some slight irritation in the disposition of the magnificent one.

THE ladies descended. The elder, evidently the mother, resembled the car considerably, being large and expensive looking. The younger—ah! the inadequacy of language! Never had Lysander Pratt beheld so ravishing a creature. She was not very big, nor very little, but just exactly right. She had hair like California sunshine and eyes like the California sky, and a mouth like the sweetest of California roses. She had the air of a little princess who rules by divine right, and she was dressed entirely up to the fashion hints for day after tomorrow; no, week after next at least.

"Who ever loved, who loved not at first sight!"

Our poor Lysander felt a weakening in the knees, a tightening of the chest, a lift and plunge of the heart before it fluttered out of him into the keeping of this pearl of all girls!

"Phyllis," said her mother, "do be careful, this place is just full of grease."
"Phyllis! Delicious name of Phyllis.
Could she possibly have been called anything else? Positively not. Oh, Phyllis," Phyllis.

They did not appear to notice Lysander. They did not even deign to smile at Henrietta, though once mother stood so near that poor Henrietta was almost obscured, if you happened to be looking at her head-

To the enchanted Lysander it seemed not more than two fleeting minutes until the chauffeur had closed the door on the royal family and was taking his place at the wheel of the magnificent one. It could not be that she was going out of his sight forever—fate could not be so cruel. This was the love of his life—one knows that surely in a moment as well as in ten years. And here he stood idly while the miles multiplied between them! He flung himself into Henrietta, who stirred with a squeak of protest.

He pursued the dream along the sunny highways that lead to the City of The Angels, and the country's charm seemed a part of that dream. The pepper trees, gorgeous in their clusters of red beads, the orange groves hung with gold and white, bungalows nestling in bright blossoming vines, skyline of mountains, all the vivid colorings of poppy and hibiscus and bignonia, made it the land of enchantment where he was to pluck—O, soon and surely—the flower of life. And as Henrietta joited and rattled and snorted along, like a complaining but industrious old lady, Lysander was rehearsing a series of highly romantic ways in which he would make Phillis' acquaintance. He had rescued her from every peril of a movie serial and received pledges of lifelong fealty from her grateful parents, when he sighted a gas station from which was just departing—the car.

No use pursuing, and Henrietta needed attention, so Lysander stopped.

"That was some car that Just left," he suggested hoperus e lean gas man.

Lysander was deeply interested. A lost chain! If he had—if he only could have found it! "Oh, it's nothing, Mrs. Willard, don't mention it. So glad to be of service. Why, yes, I'd be pleased to call sometime." call sometime

He missed a bit of his informant's m ologue. The daughter of a million You could see him, Lysander, taking her for a spin in Henrietta, now couldn't you! There was the whole thing in a nutshell. And yet what were all the stories about it not the winning of princesses, the attainment of the great wish, the coming true of the dream! Certainly he had not taken Greeley's advice to seek failure and disappointment, rather was he in this land of golden promise for the very purpose of plucking success to wear like a rose in his buttonhole.

Henrietta wheezed into sideyard with symptoms of an imminent relapse.

A tired looking but kindly woman answered Lysander's ring, her eyes softening as, with his unconscious ingratiating smile, he explained his errand. Well! so he was from Isrinville! Yet, she had a room he could have would he like to look at it? Lyzander guessed he'd take it without inspection, and could be put lis car in the garage?

Mrs. Sills opened the door, and the singing stopped. "Oh, here you are. A slim girl appeared and stood looking at Lysander, "My daughter, Mr. Pratt, Just show Mr. Pratt his room, Amy, will you?"

Amy acknowledged the introduction: said "this way," and preceded him upstairs.

The room proved to be small, but were two windows from each of which, as Miss Sills adjusted the blind, Lysander glanced. From one a glimpse of far brown hills across red and green from the other a yellow street car clanging past a corner where no less than three little box buildings displayed signs announcing they were offices.

"Everybody here in real estate?" he ighed. "Must have passed about a hundred of those places on my way out

"Well, the city's growing so fast, you know," returned Miss Amy, "and that makes a big demand for all kinds of real estate. Some people have made a lot of money in it."

"Have they?" said Lysander thought:

'The lucky ones have." She moved to the door. "I hope you'll find everything all right. And dinner's at 6."

Lysander thanked her-and for full five minutes remained at the winds

Perhaps it was destiny. Surely this had been a fateful day, for in it he had met her, and it was not impossible had been given this tip by fortune herself.

His fellow boarders were a Miss Burd. a school teacher, and a facetious plumber named Tillbury. Lysander was preoccupied with his two problems how to need Phyllis and how to make a fortune this week or next. He cursed his silly lack week or pext. He cursed his silly lack of purpose and amilitor hitherto.

He was thrilled when the plumber began to talk rents and real estate, unaware that the subject is never neglected long in any California company. Mr. Tillbury had noticed that the bungalow court down the street was for sale again. It had been sold four times since he, just for tan, had been keeping an eye on it. And every man jack had picked up a few thousand on his deal. It's a great game, all right, if you're backy. "O, certainly:" Lysander was smiling rather eagerly. No reason surely why he shouldn't give himself a little rehearsal. "If you will allow me—" and he began to open doors for them, call attention to this convenience and that view, how pleasant it was to have the morning sun at the hreakfast room, and in short made himself agreeable in a sin-cere boylsh fashlon. The Brownings were flatteringly responsive. Really it THE deal actually went through with-out a hitch and Lysander, clothed in the confidence of achievement, turned aside to make a play toward the other cal. And, humanly, having turned one od trick, he was inclined to save invention by trying it a second time.

By the simple expedient of telephong a question he discovered that the F. Willards were domiciled at the Hotel Ambassador, thus adding Sherlock Holmes to his role of Monte Cristo. Then he hiked through the Wilshire district like a locaton man spotting the home of the queen of society. Why? He was looking for a suitable residence for the Willards!

Having at last found one with what he considered possibilities, and with a representative on the spot, to whom Lysander hinted that he was sc somebody big, he was assured that any-body he brought would be treated with consideration-which costs nothing. This accomplished. Lysander went home, dead tired, calling it a day and inventing a tune to "None but the brave deserve the

After dinner, though, he wandered out on the porch, his spirits sagging into an unaccountable pensiveness. He felt, all sudden, terribly forlorn. And why! He had accomplished wonders-well, any way, a good deal. In/all the stories he'd read he couldn't remember a hero who had started out more propitiously on such a campaign. And come to think of it, that hero always won with an original idea like this. Invariably he turned some clever trick that introduced him favor-ably, and then—since "they" were made for each other. Still, Lysander felt blue. Miss Burd smiled and said it was a pleasant evening as she tripped out to a lec-ture. Mr. Tillbury, all dolled up and wear-ing an incredible necktle, waved a salute as he set out.

"O," she said. "I didn't know you were out here, Mr. Pratt."
Lysander smiled his smile.

"It isn't going to make a difference,

"I guess not." And she smiled, too. And they spoke of the weather, and then she said: "Do you think you're going to like California?"

"No future tense necessary. I do right now. Look what it's done for me."

"What has it done?" inquired Amy with rather a disconcerting directness, which she seemed to recognize herself, for a little color rose in her cheeks, though she did not try to modify the question.

the lean days when breakfast was a problem. Upon such occasions Roche would go to newspaper offices borrow some copy paper and a pencil and write poems in the outer sanctum. Then he would wait until the managing editor sent out a cashier's voucher and go merrily on his way to food.

There were also times when no overcoat was owned to keep off the winter's chill. And upon one assignment—late one snowy night—a city editor now working on Park Row remembers Roche padding the inside of his shees with cardboard for the soles had worn through.

H E worked on the World, Morning Telegraph and then ran a column on the New York Globe, but all the time he felt the urge to write fiction. He quit his newspaper adelphia used to send someone to Jersey City to intercept his stuff and fire it back for in no other way could it have been returned so quickly.

Those were trying days!
Friends urged Roche to come back to the newspaper game but he stubbornly refused. He had married a girl who had supreme faith in his ability and she was willing to share the hardships.

Roche was finally forced to leave Roche was finally forced to leave

New York or starve. There was no money for rent, food or clothes coming in so he went up to the little village of Castine, Maine—and Park Row did not see him for two years. He became one of those who failed.

Then one day the Row was thrown into a fever of excitement by a cover page announcement of a serial, "'Loot,' by Arthur Somers Roche." This was followed by his bang-up mystery story, "A Scrap of Paper"—and Roche came out of his cloister and back to the land of plenty.

Editors fought for his stuff-and whenever they wanted a story Roche would simply go to his trunk and dig up one that had gone the rounds. Such is the power of the first acceptance.

One of the tragedies of his tragic experience in getting a foothold was that his wife died just when success came.

THE first year he made more than $50,000 and his income has risen by leaps and bounds since what with his magazine pay, moving picture and play and book royalties.

His magnificent summer home overlooks the sound with private tennis court, private bathing pier and terraced gar-dens that are the pride of the countryside. He owns several automob a town house on Riverside Drive.

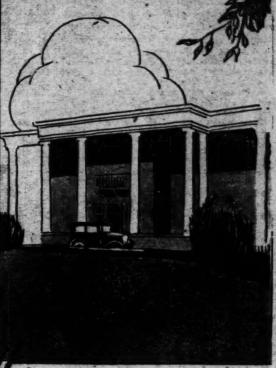

Yet he is the same Arthur Roche of his less prosperous days. He still goes to the Brevoort and is ever ready to help the young and struggling writer.

Three years ago he was married to Miss Ethel Pettit, the charming young prima donna of several light operas.

A N interesting thing Roche told me about writing his short stories of mystery was that he never makes a synopsis or outlines the story. He contrives an interesting situation for the opening and after that he lets the story work itself out. He likes to get his characters hopelessly entangled and then straighten them out again. He rarely knows what the next chapter is going to be and he never knows the final ending.

HOWEVER, what is true of his mystery stories is not true of his novel, "The Day of Faith." That was carefully thought out even to the final sentence. In this novel Roche proves him-self a prophet and seer and there are passages that are comparable only to the beautiful prose of Milton's Paradise Logt.

ASKED him how he came to write his latest novel. He replied: "Five years ago, in the middle of the bloody years, when civilization had broken down, when religion, that should have been man's rescue, was instead one of the religing points

"'My neighbor is perfect.' This is what Christianity means. But it asked of man-kind too great faith. That was why man-kind had rendered it lip service only, put-ting it away from real life.

"And yet, if mankind would accept it, would actually practice it—what then? My novel is an attempt to answer the ageold question."

N Mr. Roche's novel, the heroine, Jane I Maynard, influenced by the sublime faith of Banker Bland Hendricks, that all men are perfect if we will only believe it, opens in New York the Bland Hendricks Foundation.

Over the door are the words, "My neighbor is perfect." Newspapers jeer and society seoffs, but the experiment brings forth fruit. John Anstell, son of the richest man in the world, falls in love with Jane, and later the elder Anstell decided to capitalize the girl's great idea for his own ends.

The sweep of Mr. Roche's imagination carries the reader through this most momentous event since the war and if Michael Anstell used a woman's sublime faith for his own ends and failed, the immensity of the idea impresses the reader as he r

Mrs. Trowbridge, of Princeton, warned the Wellesley girls against the cheapening of themselves in petting parties, against allowing themselves familiarities and bad manners of numerous kinds, one being the "cut-in" during a dance. She spoke against immodest dress such as bare knees, short skirts, lack of underclothes, backless gowns and cautioned the girls to beware of the lipstick and the cigarette if they wanted to have the respect of men who are really worth while.

Her eighteen-year-old sister upbraided her because she donned a corset with her evening gown. "Good heavens, sis, but you're hopelessly out of date. You-can't dance in a corset now. A prominent freshman girl at Boston university, Miss Eleanor Carder, came right out and told the facts about dancing right out and told the facts about dancing parties in Boston: "Hardly a student is without his pocket flask," said she. "I've talked with many girls who have gone to men's colleges to attend dances or to dances where men from near-by colleges were invited, and they all have the same story. The students take it quite as a matter of course that they should sample matter of course that they should sample the contents of their flasks in the presence of the girls. Providence "debs" are accused of inciting the young men of Brown university to indulge in petting parties and wrought-up sexual emotions by using "pash" perfumes and wearing "pash" garters.

By Mrs. Martha Lee

F THE world really is taking a moral holiday to the tune of a janglesome jazz band, as reformers would have us believe, the college students especially are indulging in a gala celebration of indecorum and impropriety in their social life. Certain of the men students, jazz dance too far with the smuggled flask at proms and hops. In manners and conduct they are easy, irresponsible, disrespectful of women and inclined to sensuality.

The girl students and the debutantes with whom these students associate are in turn accused of drinking, smoking, ting," vulgar and passionate dancing, nakedness in dress, license in speech and manners and in general the overturn-ing and hilarious smashing up of the pedestal of spiritual exaltation upon which the future mothers of the race should stand.

"animalism" that colors their extracurriculum college life extends even to a slight physical contact like the handshake. one authority submits.

Some colleges have even found it necessary to formulate moral codes for the stuats to follow in their social relations, so lost in the storm of jazz the young people

The Brown university boys started the reaction against jazz in the colleges. The Brown Daily Herald dared to come out and tell the world editorially of some of the goings-on at dances and at petting parties between social buds and college

Then Mrs. Augustus Trowbridge, wife of a Princeton professor, lectured pefore the Wellesley college girls and expressed her-self in no uncertain terms concerning present-day social evils to be avoided by nice young women. Vulgar dancing, backless gowns, smoking, chaperoniess automobile rides and lax manners between the sexes

Wells college considered it an opportune time to come forward with a moral and social code for college girls. A classin ethics at Ohio State university presented a similar code for both men and women

A Reform Setting In.

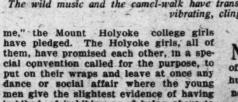

THE morals and manners of the college student have been whacked at by critics from this side and that. A reform is setting in from within, too, apparently. The college students have had enough of social manifestations of "animalism," as the jazz tendency in dance, dress and deportment has been called.

William W. Hall, editor of The Brown Daily Herald, editoralized on the dancing that he has witnessed at Brown university parties: "The modern dances are disgust ing; the toddle, with its variations and vibrations; the shimmy with its brazen pandering to the animal senses, and the worst offspring of jazz, the camel walk. There is but one idea predominant in these dances—we will leave it unnamed."

Another prominent Brown student has pointed out that the vulgarity of the dancing of the Providence "debs" who come to Brown to dance is popularizing indecency; that the girls wear "pash perfumes" and pash garters and generally try to entice "pash perfumes" and the men to indulge in petting parties and wrought-up sexual emotions.

"The modern social bud is a frivolous, passionate, sensation-seeking little thing," Editor Hall writes in The Brown Herald. "The modern age of girls and young men

This condition of affairs is bothering the college women mightily. Naturally enough, their friends and future husbands are the college men and they feel that they have a social and moral status to maintain.

Representatives of forty-five colleges east of the Mississippi river, in conference at the Women's Intercollegiate Associa-tion for Student Government at Simmons college, Boston, in November, took action concerning the intoxicant problem. They passed a resolution that is really a formal expression of the opinion of the great majority of college women throughout the country. Whether or not it will have any effect on the men remains to be seen. These college women declared:

"The responsibility for setting and main-taining moral standards rests to a large extent upon the men and women of our

"We recognize that this tendency leads to a lowering of standard and is an insidi-ous menace to the highest type of social intercourse.

"Therefore, we, the delegates to the Women's Intercollegiate Association for Student Government, take a decided stand against any use of intexicants at college sccial affairs, and urge all college men and women to create a wholesome public opinion on this problem."

The college men themselves recognize the situation. Fraternity men at Cornell university, for instance, have come out for the complete observance of the prohibi-tion law and against private drinking, especially at house parties and at dances where their girl friends are present. They have also joined with the alumni to prevent drinking at alumni reunions and like good boys they have set their faces against "uncontrolled dancing" and too zippy jazz

 At Wells college for women, at Aurora, on Cayuga lake, N. Y., young men from neighboring universities who are invited to the dances know that drinking is frowned upon by the girls there. In fact, guests who are even slightly intoxicated are not allowed by the college nuthorities all what their mammas would wish. Different at Hiram.

T is said that of all co-educational colleges in América, Hiram college, in Portage county, Ohio, over which once presided James A. Garfield, has the most presided James A. Garrield, has the most unique companionship between the sexes. It is said to be most wholesome, but that probably depends on the wholesomeness of the stadeats themselves, practically all of whom come from rural homes and are unacquainted with the dazzling iniquities

Jazz has not penetrated to Hiram. Or its system of "perching," reminiscent of grandfather's day, when every fellow had just one girl and every girl had just one

They perch in couples at Hiram, they do. At the beginning of each college year each "stude" gets himself a girl, and they perch together exclusively for that year, just like birds that mate every season. They attend "Y" parties, football rallies, "sugar day" in the woods and class parties and go on long hikes together.

Hiram's college life is surprisingly free from scandals, which is more than can be said for many a more urban college com-munity nowadays. The boys and girls look on each other as chums, not sweet-hearts, and the faculty members chum with them, too. They never dress to impress each other. The kind of plain impress each other. The kind of plain clothes that they wear at home, working on the farm, are good enough to work for a degree in. "Perching" is only incidental. The girls need no rouge and the boys laugh at form fitting suits. They would hold up their hands in horror if they saw a "camel walk."

At other colleges, however, where the students are of the city, and among whom the stage and the motion picture have worked as a leaven, the insistence upon sex is extremely noticeable. This can be seen in the college publications, particularly humorous columns and papers. For instance, the Purple Parrot, of Northwestern university, at Evanston, Ill., re-cently felt called upon to give instruction in kissing to neophytes. "When a man kisses you, struggle fiercely at first and then appear gradually to be overcome by his superior strength," reads the instructions.

"Close your eyes and hold yourself rigid, relaxing a bit if the kiss endures. "Let a variety of expression flood your face—anger, sorrow, despair, joy. It is important that all these be regis-

N fact, the question of whether or not they should tolerate men friends who drink, whether or not the extreme modern dances should be done, whether or not it is seemly for girls to smoke, whether or not evening gowns should be very decol-lete at the top and deskirtee at the knee, worried Wells college that the girls got together and wrote their own moral code, so that they might keep straight in this age of temptation and breaking up of social tradition. Such a code, recognized by all as being the right and proper thing, has helped the Wells girls to main-tain their self-respect and that of the men

The Wells moral code for modern girls was read in Professor A. R. Chandler's class in ethics at Ohio State university at Columbus. The class liked the idea and evolved a questionnaire from it that is really a moral code applicable to both young men and young women students.

Ohio State students were allowed to judge themselves and their own social and moral standing by answering the followkeyhole and the cracks of the transom and burned incense as a protection and then enjoyed a soothing little smoke.

A monitor walked down the hall, no-ticed how the cracks in the door were tilled and knocked, mayhap thinking someone was trying to do away with her-self by turning on the gas. For a long time the door was not opened. There was a scurrying inside, an opening of windows and a putting away of smoking equipment in the trunk under the cozy

When the monitor finally made an entrance cigarette smoke was only slightly discernible. The young ladies were suspended from the university, however.

Put out of college for merely puffing at a cigarette! The rest of the co-eds thought this most unfair. They brought thought this most untair. They brought to the attention of the proper student committee that smoking was not prohibited in Fournald hall, where faculty and grad students lived. They were told that the grads had enough stability and poise and wisdom of advanced age to determine their own stand on this masculine vice to which women have asserted their right.

In the gift shops and student supply stores near colleges today a large sale of cigarettes is reported. And a favorite gift from one girl to another is often an amber or enameled or jeweled cigarette holder. One shop near an eastern university had a run this Christmas on its supply of cigarette holders that look like gold lockets. These lockets, when snapped open, form the cigarette holder, and on them is the college seal in colored enamel.

In almost every college where there are women students the tendency to let-ting down of the bars between girls and men, to an increased intimacy between them, noticeable since the jazz music and corsetless dance craze, has been the sub-ject of much thought, and is decried as a modern evil. The girls have been urged to hold to the "hands-off" tradition; to insist on a proper position in dancing, the bodies of the two dancers not touching, and to wear gowns that are none too re-

Nevertheless, at most of the university dances, especially in the east, a general effect of extreme nakedness impresses the looker-on. This is due in part to the fact that college students like the com-pany of the ladies of the stage and invite them to their house parties and proms. The other girls, seeing this type of person, usually strikingly and slightly clothed, attracting the attention of the youths. go in for nakedness and for chorus girl manners, too. "But," he said, "a league of nations is no substitute for the supremacy of the

The British, although in a far stronger position, left no more doubt than the French as to what they considered their basic requirement—their own security. Both before and after the president's arrival in Europe their press was full of it; it was echoed by every public speaker.

"One thing is clear," says The London Times of December 11. "This war could not have been won for civilization but for the British sea power. There can therefore be no question, so far as this country is concerned, of diminishing the sharpness of the weapon that has given us the victory

Minutes of the meeting of the Supreme War Council, held in M. Pichon's Room at the Quai d'Orsay, Paris, on Monday, PRACTICALLY every argument that was adduced by the French was also put forward by the British. There was the argument of "special risk;" that Great war in the future, there would be no neutrals with property rights to protect, for, under the league, all nations would join to enforce its decisions as against the unruly nation or nations, and the seas would be controlled by the powers of the league. The important thing, therefore, was first to get the league, with its essential guarantees of safety, and then the associated nations could work out regulations for sea traffic and provide for limitation of naval armaments. "The key to the peace," as he said in the Guildhall speech, "was the guarantee of the peace, not the items of it."

BRITISH OPINION

IS DIVIDED.

N England the president found a sup-I N England the president found a support for his program that did not exist in France; for in France the leadership was unified by a common fear, while in England the sense of naval superiority encouraged the development of two groups of opinion. One was the conservative, admiralty-influenced group—The Morning Post, Lord Curzon, Winston Spencer Churchill—which was for maintaining naval supremacy at all odds and for more rather than less sea power. The Morning Post saw in the league of nations only an "insidious scheme for internationalizing "insidious scheme for internationalizing the British empire and distributing its resources among foreigners."

But there was another powerful, liberal-labor group in the empire, led by such men as General Smuts and Lord Robert Cecil, expressed by such newspapers as The Man-thester Guardian, which strongly supported the president's program. While they were never for weakening the security of Great Britain, especially in a time of world turmoil, they shared the president's vision of world safety not dependent upon the dominant military power of any one state, not even Great Britain, but upon a generous co-operation of the nations in guaranteeing their mutual safety. They looked forward to the future limitation of naval armament and to a league of nations which "should discharge for liberty some of the functions hitherto performed by the British

As for Mr. Lloyd George, he used and played both of these groups at Paris as the momentary exigencies of politics demanded. He took with him as his immediate associates, however—and this is significant associates, however—and this is significant—the chief league of nations advocates, Smuts and Cecil, and even a representative, in.Mr. Barnes, of the labor group; but on occasion he summoned Churchill and Curzon as counter-irritants. Clemenceau represented the unity of France; Lloyd George the diversity of Britain. The league of nations would, of course, never have materialized at all if it had not been for the determined team-play of American and British liberals. and British liberals.

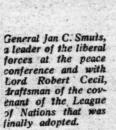

and British liberals.

I have referred to the two groups of opinion in Great Britain regarding the limitation of naval armament; but there were also two in America, and both were represented at Paris. For if there were British leaders who saw the future security of their empire dependent upon the supremacy of naval armament, so there were American leaders who feared for the future security of America unless American haval armament was at least equal can haval armament was at least equal to that of Great Britain. Among the peace conference were those of the peace conference (were those of the peace conference) Admiral Benson, American naval adviser, and his argument, early and late, was that the United States should have a strong memorandum submitted to the president on April 9 he sets forth the case of Great Britain. In of the strong navy group. With the German fleet destroyed, the British navy is more powerful in the world than ever bestrong enough to dominate the seas in whatever quarter of the globe that domination may be required." This is not only dangerous, he argues, for America, but "it hampers our influence in the councils of the world, whether within the league or outside of it."

UST as the military men of France and Great Britain argue "special risk" as a ason for armament, so also does Admiral Benson for America:

"Our own present and prospective world position needs special consideration. are setting out to be the greatest com-mercial rival of Great Britain on the seas . . . Heretofore we have lived apart, but now we are to live in constant and intimate relation with the rest of the world. We must be able to enter every world con-ference with the confidence of equality."

He argued, therefore, for an American navy equal to that of Great Britain and suggested, in order to secure this without increasing world armament, that the Brit-

Designated for This Work by the Former President. CHAPTER IV.

AVAL disarmament was never discussed at Paris with anything like the completeness and frankness which characterized the controversy over limitation of land armament and the abolition of compulsory military service.

There were the best of reasons Great Britain, whose power was the sea, emerged from the war in a different situation from the French. The French, as a result of the war, felt themselves, in the stew of continental Europe, less secure than before, and the whole problem of military armament or an alliance of armed nations to fortify French The British, on the other hand, came out of the war feeling more secure. Their only great naval rival in Europe was crushed; the redoubtable German fleet, o score of great battleships and cruisers, a hundred or more lesser fighting lay rusting safely in the northern English harbor of Scapa Flow. The slight future threat of submarine warfare or of armed flying craft could be easily dealt with in coming peace conference.

In the past the next most important world naval power, the United States, had derived great strength from the potential hostility of the British and German fleets, each of which was kept close at home for fear of the other. But the disappearance of the German navy left, the British in a position of unparalleled power upon the seas, which they continue to hold today. This was further augmented by the albetween the British and the Japanese, the third great naval power of the While the possibility of a conflict etween Great Britain and the United States was remote, not merely for reas of sentiment, which were powerful, hut be-cause both had plenty of room in the world and there was no real cause for aggression upon the part of either, yet the fact of British supremacy upon the seas was a potent element in determining their course at the peace conference.

A.H. Frasier

L. Harrison

HUS it was, that while the central policy of the French was to struggle desperately at Paris for more power, more security, and even more rather than less military armament, thereby bringing all the problems of compulsory military service, private manufacture of war munitions and the like strongly into the foreground, the central policy of the British was to preserve the status quo. The French (and the Italians) had something to get at the peace conference, while the British (and the Japanese) had only something to keep The French felt their weakness, their po tential inferiority at Paris; the British new their power, and they acted to perfection according to the traditional British diplomatic policy: "Wait and see."

While the chief interest of the French since rather than reparations or future commer-cial expansion, the chief interest of the British was to make sure of the new access to raw materials, the new trade routes, the new colonies, which were al-ready practically in their possession, and to secure a proper share of the reparations. French interests at Paris (mirrored by Tardieu in his book) were thus chiefly military, while British interests (mirrored

Thus it was that while the vital problem of sea power loomed sometimes in the background of the discussions at Paris, and once, in April, while the disposition of the captured German navy was sharply under consideration, it even threatened to break through the barriers of avoidance which seemed always to hedge it about, it was never really and frankly met. It was not met because it did not have to be met, while the problem of land armament did have to be met. It did not have to be provided for in the treaty. It was a matter not so much between the allies and Germany, as between Great Britain, America and Japan.

But the British left no doubt whatever as to their absolute commitment to the idea of British naval supremacy.

In November, 1918, only a short time after the armisfice, Winston Spencer Churchill, then British minister of muni-

Britain was in a peculiarly dangerous position. "We could not give up our naval superiority, because we are an island power," wrote Gilbert Murray; "and if we were once defeated at sea and blockaded we could all be starved to death or submission in a few weeks."

And just as Leon Bourgeois argued for the French that if the guarantee of the league of nations was accepted, as a substitute for armament in securing the safety of France, a permanent military organization and a general staff would be a necessary feature of the league, so the British admiralty envisaged a possible league naval staff—which they promptly rejected.

Powerful elements in Great Britain, ex actly as in France, also suggested special alliances which would further guarantee security—an alliance which the French finally secured in the Anglo-American treaty. In Great Britain the suggestion took the form of an Anglo-American

"All of us," said The London Times December 11, 1918, "recognize that the future happiness of the world depends on drawing closer the bonds between us and the United States, and to that shall work with all the streng in us."

But in England, as in France, the president hewed to the line-of his original program of a league of nations, which would entually guarantee the safety which the nations imperatively demanded. He talked not armaments or alliances, but a "concert of power."

"There must now be," as he told the English in his Guildhall speech of Decem-ber 28, "not a balance of power, not one powerful group of nations set off against another, but a single, overwhelming, pow-erful group of nations who shall be the trustees of the peace of the world."

ish navy be reduced to an equality with the American navy and afterward that "Great Britain and America determine jointly from time to time what the strength of the two fleets shall be."

In this position Admiral Benson was strongly supported by Secretary Daniels, who came to Paris during the peace con-

"The United States should have a navy equal to any that sails the seas," he said. Indeed, it is possible to quote President Wilson himself as supporting this program—before we came into the war. He said in an address at St. Louis, February 3, 1415.

"There is no other navy in the world that has to cover so great an area of defense as the American navy, and it ought, in my judgment, to be comparably the most ade-quate navy in the world."

He recognized as clearly in the case of America as in that of France or Great Britain that security was fundamental, and that if the sense of security that rested upon armament was to be disturbed by limiting armament, then there must be a new guarantee of safety set and if the new guarantee of safety set up. basis of peace was to be armed ships and great guns, as it had been in the past, then America must be prepared for that also; but he was for another method, and also; but he was for another method, and to this he bent every energy at Paris, and he was supported by the liberal-labor group in Great Britain, who saw as clearly and dreaded as profoundly the possibility of a new competition in naval armament.

No one at Paris was a more ardent advocate of limitation of land armament than Lloyd George and none avoided the prob-

QUESTION OF GERMAN FLEET.

ONLY one thing immediately threatened to make it less pronounced and that was the possible distribution of the great rival German and Austrian fleets among the allied and associated powers. Most of these ships were safely interned and guarded in the English harbor of Scapa Flow. In total these constituted a great and powerful fleet; 27 battleships and battle of the same of tle cruisers, including several great dread-naughts; 19 light cruisers, 101 destroyers can naval advisers had no doubt what ought to be done with them; they ought to be sailed out into the deep sea, the wa-ter-cocks opened, and the entire fleet sunk to the bottom.

"The destruction of the German-Austrian issels," said Admiral Benson, "would be practical demonstration to the world of a sincerity of the high contracting pares in their determination to reduce arma-

Admiral Benson assumed in his report (of April 7) that Great Britain desired distribution rather than destruction; but there is little to bear out this assumption. The difficulties would be too great, the rivalries aroused too bitter, and in the end the distribution might well reduce the ratio of ascendancy of the British. Besides, the German ships were built on wholly different mechanical standards from the British—by metric measurements—and mainish-by metric measurements-and main-

The naval conditions of the peace pro-pozed by the admirals in the session of March 6 provided for the destruction of all submarines and all warships beyond those Germany should be permitted to re-tain. The French reserved on each of these clauses and a long tussle began.

It finally headed up in a sharp passage during a meeting on April 25 at President Wilson's residence in the Place des Etats Unis. The Italian premier had gone home to protest against the attitude of the council regarding Fiume. Only the so-called "Big Three" were in attendance—Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemencean, but each had with him his citief naval adviser, Admiral Benson for America, Rear Admiral miral Benson for America, Rear Admiral Hope for Great Britain and Admiral Le Bon for France. It was at this meeting that a general discussion of naval disarmament was almost precipitated, as will be seen in the remarks of Lloyd George (secret minutes):

ADMIRAL BENSON pointed out that any decision, except to sink the ships, meant an increase of armaments. MR. LLOYD GEORGE said he could give Admiral Benson his proposal for stopping the increase of armaments, and even bring about a decrease, but he doubted if the admiral would accept it. (The proposal an American admiral would find unacceptable meant probably a proposal for reduction, keeping to existing proportions.) The British government did not want these ships and were ready to discuss even the decrease of navies, provided all would question. . . He fully agreed that the French position in this matter ought to be considered. His idea was that France should have some of these that France should have some or these ships, and sink a corresponding number of old ships, or, if unwilling to sink them, she might break them up, which Admiral Hope told him would be a business proposition.

THE POSITION TAKEN BY FRANCE.

PRESIDENT WILSON then asked the reason for the French objection to the destruction of the ships and Admiral Le Bon replied:

ADMIRAL LE BON said the reason was, first, that by sinking the ships valuable property would be destroyed and there would be an increase in the general losses of the war. French public opinion was strongly against this. A more especial reason was, however, that if the ships were divided among the allied and associated powers it would make a considerable addition French navy. During five years, owing to the immense efforts of French in-dust les in supplying the armies, it had and about 135 submarines. Admiral Ben-son estimated that the distribution of these German-Austrian ships would increase the great powers about 30 per cent. The Ameri-tenance might have been almost as expensive as the production of new ships. Although Lloyd George apparently used the disposition of the German ships strategically in the conferences, the destruction of the rival navy seems to have been the real policy of the British admiralty. It was the French who stood out for distribution: who desired to increase, rather than decrease

Slow Curtain and Fast Music for Revue

Not Difficult to See How It Got Foothold With Tired "New York" Business Men. But It Is Passing Now. Managers Should Leave Offices and Learn to Know Dixie "As She Are."

By Fuzzy Woodruff

HERE are signs that the revue craze that struck New York and thereby devastated the entire country is about to expend itself through the sheer lack of force of its own inanity. For which the powers be praised—though it could happen that something worse could take its place, which is only harely possible.

But in the passing of the revue, the question naturally arises—how the dickens did it ever guids hold outside of New York. It had a held There's no question about that. Atlantans have fought to see anything that was labelled "Follies" or "Jollies" or "Whirls" or "Twirls," when they have remained cold and obdurate to every other class of entertainment from Shakespeare to circuses.

At best the revue was never anything but a girl backed vaudeville show with futuristic stage settings and a general atmosphere of bawdry, and the prices for this entertainment were always just as fantastic as the scenery and the cos-

It's not difficult to see how the revue got its hold in New York. The theater-going population of New York is largely transitory. We hear and read of the tired husiness man of New York rushing to the girlie shows, but in reality any investigation would disclose that the tired business men that make up this patronage are tired business men of Hartford, Com., and Akron, Ohlo, and Dallas, Tex., and Denver, Col., and possibly of Atlanta, Ga., who are resting up by being really wicked der-ing their brief sojourn in the eastern me-

TRANSITORY patronage demands the A lightest sort of entertainment. Generally it likes entertainment that fits in fairly well with an alcoholic appetizer therefor. The revue was all of that.

And then the revues always provided ome real fun for the real New Yorkers. The satire of the thing was always aimed at some condition that was essentially as local as the latest sag in the Brooklyn bridge, or the peculiar patois of the Bronx.

But what appeal the revue had after it was put on the road passes all comprehension. We are fairly staid and stolid people here in the provinces. We transact business and get mighty tired thereby, but at least when we go about our amuse-ments we are expected to go about our business the next day. We like tunes that linger in memory and situations that bring a reminiscent chuckle days after we've seen a show. And none of these things do the revues provide. Their impressions are as fleeting as time,

But the strangest feature in connection with their popularity is that the revue's dy was never edited to fit provincial conditions. The comedy was ever on sublects of particular and peculiar value to New York and to nowhere else on earth

We, in Atlanta, were expected to chuckle over jests about subway condi-tions that we had never smelled. We were expected to fall into a perfect wave of patriotic fervor when some lady in nothing much suggested that Ireland should be free, when the average southerner cares no more about whether Ire-land is a free or a subject state than he does about sugar in corn bread. We were expected to be just as duly excited over the existence of the Volstead act as New York is, despite the fact that a thousand distilleries are working overtime in our immediate environs. We were likewise supposed to be right on tiptoes for all the ~ra'flage about New York's smartest divorce suit, and we were supposed to be on terms of intimacy with the na and menu peculiarities of every fashicnable New York restaurant.

Of course, there are some of us who date everything from our two weeks' visit to gay Gotham in the summer of 1912 and who have accordingly adopted Broadway as our very own and are inclined to stand up and salute whenever the name of that magic street is mentioned, but then again there are a good many of us to whom this senseless attempt to cram down a dose of highly localized nothing gives a distinct and palpable pain.

T WOULD seem a fairly good idea if the

New York producers could occasionally find time to get out in the provinces and see that the people thereabouts are perhaps human beings after all.

Here's John Drinkwater producing "Oliver Cromwell," a play that treats of the great British commoner in the splendidly convincing and enlightening method he employed in "Abraham Lincoln."

And still the south has never seen a production of that last named masterplece, probably because the New York office has an idea that Lincoln is still a bete noir in Bixte. It might be enlightening for those producers to visit Atlanta and see in a prominent hotel a heroic portrait of William Tecumseh Sherman and note the fact that it has never been mud slung or otherwise mal-treated.

O'N THE other hand, New York producers had no hesitancy in sending out "Emperor Jones," the piece starring John Gilpin, the negro Thespian, and in-augurating the tour at Richmond, Va, just because Gilpin happened to have been born in Richmond and had lived there briefly before he went to chumming with the gay lads at some effete university of the exclusive east.

S PEAKING of "Oliver Cromwell," the London Times carried the following comment after its initial production:

"In Drinkwater's 'Cromwell' there is all the majestic violence that there is in Carlyle's 'Cromwell' in so far as we see him in the play he is a much hambler and more rejuctant 'Malleus Dai.' Yet Drinkwater's plan for historical hiographical drama certainly succeeds in presenting all the principal facts of his heroes, and his portrait of this new hero is attractive, and not unjust, either in commission or omission."

W ITH all the revivals of plays in New York recently, it has been noticed that, although surface details could easily be brought up to date, in more than one instance the basic psychology of this and that play had rusted. Those plays fared best which, as in the case of "Alias Jimmy best which, as in the case of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," were written frankly as melodramas. They still remain good entertainment. Rejuvenated plays with a theme, such as "Bought and Paid For," don't fare so well with present day audiences, accustomed to the strictly modern girl in "Binebeard's Eighth Wife." Said James Whittaker in The Daily News: "Bought and Paid For was a thirst tor a good cry which was quenched long ago and it will not return until we have tired of the new flavor with which 'Kiki,' when she masters her man with a pink pajama in the Belasco and his Eighth Wife, when she cracks pottery on Bluebeard in the Ritz, have entickled the 1921 palate.

Title for the baudier drama, but ft HERE is a considerable public apperepresents a limited public and one quickly exhausted by two or three pieces. It dwindles to nothing compared with the multitude that prefers other kinds. Sentiment, for instance, will outsell smut in every city in the land. 'Ladies' Night' is not precisely starving in the provinces, but it is not making as much seneral sentiments. but it is not making as much money as 'Abraham Lincoln'—not by a long shot. The American playwright who has the largest yault of royalties, you might note, is the one whose every line and every scene has been as pure as the driveling 'Getting Gertle's Garter' ing an indefinite engagement in the store-house and "The First Year" runs on for-ever. There is really nothing to get ex-cited about."—Alexander Woollcott in The New York Times.

Atlanta's Leadership in Junior Music

By Louise Dooly

HE flood of interest that, is enguifing the whole country in the subject of music as a factor in the education of youth, and there-fore music in the public schools, makes it pertient to investigate what is being done here at home. Such a survey will be found nost encouraging.

Two particular instances prove that Attanta is abreast of any city in the United States in its junior music work. The program and accomplishment of the Junior Music club, which is the children's department of the Atlanta Music club, operating under its own director, Miss Evelyn Jackson, but having the backing and assistance of the senior organization, was commended last year at the biennial of the National Federation of Music clubs as an example for junior work throughout lederation.

Under the supervisor of music in the public schools, Miss Kate Lee Harralson, and her assistant, Miss Ruth Weegand, music memory contests are being conducted (these only a part of the public school program), which are in line with suggestions advocated by the General Federation of Woman's Clubs, the National Federation of Music clubs and all the music teachers' associations.

RS. ROSE V. S. BERRY, of Califor-Federation of Women's Clubs, during her recent visit in Atlanta, cited music memory contests as a highly constructive force in the building up of a well-rounded citi zenship, equipped to appreciate the best there is in music and therefore to give proper showing to American achievement in music.

"Through the music memory contests." said Mrs. Berry, "children in one year, learn to know, and therefore enjoy, at least fifty pieces of worth-while music. Let the schools keep on with this for four years, and the children will know 200, a basis of musical knowledge that will mean much for American musical standards of

At the same time, this method is a very direct one, she said, for supplanting jazz and such distortions of musical ideals.

An incomplete survey of the grammar schools this fall brought out the interesting fact, that among the pupils there are 1,624 studying piano, 107 violin, 1 cello, 13 cornet, 1 trombone, 103 drum, 27 bugles, 1 piecolo, 4 flute, 8 clarionet, 2 saxaphone, 3 alto harp, 14 harp.

HESE statistics do not include the Thigh schools, all of which, I think, have their orchestras or bands. The Boys' High school has four musical organizations, an orchestra, a band, a mandolin and guitar club and a giee club. There is probably not a school in the city which does not own a talking machine, which it has bought with money the pupils themselves made, or have won in music contests.

The Junior Music club has now practically completed its orchestra of forty pieces, which will be under the direction of W. W. Hubner. A few grown people will be included in it at first as leaders until the children can stand alone.

The Junior club also has semi-monthly ing, which include lectures, concerts by the children themselves, and occasionally recitals by visiting artists.

The most conspicuous event of the Junior Music club year is slated for the coming week, when the club will sponsor a matinee concert by the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra. Eugen Ysaye, the celebrated conductor, does not make a practice of conducting at matinees, but las: year, so great was his approval of this children's movement, that he himself wielded the baton, and had his concert master anticipate the concert with some explanation of the qualities and meaning of the various instruments and groups of instruments in the orchestra. The children of Atlanta provide an attendance each year of several thousand. It grows from year to year, reaching last winter the grand total of 5,000. On account of the large attendance, it is possible to give the children this great advantage at the remained rate of 25 cents. nominal rate of 25 cents.

THE value of such a concert with its attendant lecture for the children, had probably its first conspicuous advocate in Walter Damrosch, who has for years given children's concerts with the New York Symphony or Clestra, several times during the season. These have a patronage alike from elegant little New Yorkers clad in velvets, furs and patent leathers, to pushing little East Siders, and all enjoy it together.

All the cities which have their own symphony orchestras are now showing farsighted discernment of future support by having a regular program of children's lecture concerts. It is to the credit of Atlanta, that although she has no orchestra, she was probably the first, outside of New York, where Dr. Damrosch blazed the trail, to inaugurate children's orchestra concerts. In fact, Cincinnati, which has for many years had its own orchestra, and sent it to Atlanta, got the idea of the children's orchestra concerts from Atlanta.

The Junior Music club, in order that no talent may go neglected, has in its membership a volunteer teacher, who is giving lessons weekly to children at the Home for the Friendless who show an aptitude for musical development. A children's festival is one of the club's ambitions, and, judging by the success of their movements in other lines, they will have the festival. The children's part of the Cincinnati festival is one of the things that people go hundreds of miles to hear.

O story of junior music in Atlanta N would be complete without high tribute to the Rotary boys' band, of which W. M. Brownlee is the instigator and patron: saint. Something over 200 boys compose this organization, and it is proving a marvelous stepping stone to the building of character and a music-loving public.

The executive board of the Georgia Federation of Music clubs at its recent meeting in Atlanta, paid high tribute to the value of this organization, and will extend an invitation to the band to attend the biennial of the National Federation of Music clubs, in Asheville in June, 1923.

Heavy Obligation On Theater Critic

F the appeal of the theater were not general; if it were possible for the reviewers of plays to so separate their readers that they could advise one group to see a play and warn another against it. it might be possible for them to pick an audience for such a play without danger of attracting those to whom it would prove a bore, or give offense or do actual harm. But that is not possible, says Burns Mantle in The New York Globe.

Therefore the theater guide's obligation to this public lies heavily upon him in the case of a play like this one. It is distinctly short-weight as entertainment, of questionable moral influence and unworthy the ambitions or the fine talent of the player who selected it to signalize his debut as an actor-manager.

It is only fair to add, however, that so far as the entertainment's short-weight feature is concerned, a one-act play is to be added Monday night, when St. John Ervine's "The Critic" will be used as a curtain raiser.

One of World's Wonders Is Strange Outcropping of Bed of Granite and Rock on Which Atlanta Is Situated.

By Paul Steven:on

TONE MOUNTAIN—solid pile of granite—rising sheer and stark from level plains to a height of 666 feet. A mighty rock standing in lonely grandeur serving as History's sentinel as ages come and go in endless procession down the shadowy corridors of Time. Why is it there? What convulsion of Nature formed it? How long has it remained in its present shape and condition? As the darky would say, "How come it?"

It is the largest rock on the western hemisphere!

Located sixteen miles from Atlanta, this strange phenomenon of nature, is viewed by tens of thousands of people every year; visitors from all sections of the country gaze on it in wonder; parties of pleasure seekers give picnics on its broad slope or under its towering shoulder lovers stroll over its bare, bald summit; men and women carve their initials in its granite sides and even natives look at it in awe and reverence.

Stone Mountain - what a wealth of tradition envelopes it. Battles have been fought around its base. Fugitives have sought shelter in its fastnesses. Shells from the batteries of the armies of Joe Johnston and Sherman have exploded on its face. Revolutionary war followers of General McIntosh and General Green have trudged wearily before it. Cherokee Indians tore down their tepees from in front of it in their last march westward. The last conference of the Indian tribes was held near the mountain when Alexander McGilivary, half-breed chief of the Creek Indians, was sent to New York in 1790 to sign a treaty with the United States government.

H ARDY SPANISH adventurers under Hernando De Soto visited Stone Mountain in 1539. Stone Mountain was standing almost exactly as it stands today when Columbus first sighted land in the West Indies in 1492. Practically unchanged, this vast monolith was standing when the Saracens were driven back from France by Charles Martel at Tours.

When the Caesars swept over Europe, when Christ was born in Bethlehem, when the writing appeared on the walls in ancient Babylon, when the mighty hosts of Xerxes crossed ponderously over the Hellespont, when Rameses I. built an empire on the Nile, old Stone Mountain stood, almost unchanged from its present shape, towering high above the present plains around it.

Indians looked upon Stone Mountain with superstitious awe. From earliest times it has been a conspicuous object on the horizon. In the early history of Georgia it was called "Rock Mountain," and Dr. Sherwood, who wrote the famous Gazeteer, was the first to call it by its proper name, Stone Mountain. At one time a tower, 165 feet high, was erected on its crest by Aaron Cloud but it fell long ago, "a prey to the storms," as one writer, puts it.

In Dr. Lucian Lamar Knight's "Georgia's Landmarks, Memorials and Legends," it is stated that there was a settlement at Stone Mountain long before there was a house built at Decatur and Decatur is many years older than Atlanta. As early as 1825 a stage coach line ran from Milledgeville to Stone Mountain by way of Madison and Eatonton. Another line ran from Stone Mountain to Athens, Tenn. Even in those days Stone Mountain was an object of keen interest to tourists from all parts of the state and from the other states then in existence.

GEOLOGISTS are of the opinion that Stone Mountain has existed in its present shape for millions of years. Dr. S. W. McCallie, one of the foremost geologists in America and head of the geological department of Georgia, probably knows more about Stone Mountain than any other one man. Dr. McCallie declares that the granite knob projecting above the earth known now as Stone Mountain was forced through a weak spot in the earth's crust by some convulsion of nature millions of years ago. He said the granite which forms Stone Mountain is a much more recent rock than the rock surrounding the mountain.

Stone mountain is nearly seven miles in circumference at its base. This mass of granite was forced up through the rock, consisting of schists and gneisses, and originally formed the inner base of a very high mountain. The gneisses and schists which were bent upward and once formed the top of the high mountain are several million years old, according to Dr. McCallie. The granite of which Stone Mountain is formed is probably between 6,000,000 and 8,000,000 years old.

Granite of various ages and kinds is found in spots underneath the earth's crust in the territory now occupied by the city of Atlanta. These granites also are underneath the earth's crust in the territory between Atlanta and Stone Mountain on the east and between Atlanta and the Chattahoochee river on the west. On the other side of the Chattahoochee giver in the vicinity of Marietta and Tate marble is found near the earth's surface.

Mountain is formed comes out again above the surface near Lithonia, Ga., in a mass which is not as high as Stone Mountain but is much larger in area. The granite under Atlanta probably is of the same age as the Stone Mountain granite, according to Dr. McCallie.

Atlanta and its suburbs are located directly over this bed of granite. The granite is found in varying depths. Sometimes it crops out of the surface, having arisen through dykes passing through stratified rock. Sometimes it will be found at the depth of a mile. About thirty years ago an artesian well was driven 2,200 feet into the earth at Five Points. It passed through stratified rock but no granite was touched when it was arilled. The underlying bed of granite would be reached at varying depths in arly all eastern and northern Georgia According to Dr. McCallie the isolated mountain that rises so singularly above the plateau should be conceived as one of the remnants of high and extensive mountain chains which once occupied most of the area of the present plateau. but which in the course of ages have en worn away by the elements, Dr. Mc-Callie is of the opinion the crest of the mountain rising above the present Stone Mountain was possibly a mile high.

The almost complete disappearance of the ancient mountain of which the present Stone Mountain forms the base is due largely to erosion, decay and crumbling of rock, splitting asunder of rocks by frosts and thaw, washing and gullying of slopes by rainwater and cutting of ravines and valleys by brooks and rivers and transportation of the waste of the land by streams to the sea. Not all parts of the mountain region, however, were reduced at the same rate, for the rocks did not everywhere offer the same degree of resistence to destruction. This is an important point as far as Stone Mountain is concerned because when the weaker rocks were worn down probably very rapidly the face of the present Stone Mountain was uncovered.

THE rock of which Stone Mountain is composed is granite, a material which, in a period far remote, surged up from below in a molten state and invaded the rock folds of the ancient mountain. It is much harder and tougher than any of the surrounding rocks. One of its strangest features, however, is that, unlike most rock which have been subjected to mountain building stresses, it is essentially free from those parallel and more or less regularly-spaced cracks that are called "joints." A few sparse discontinuous partings of this sort can be seen in its side but as a whose the mountain is really a single, undivided block, a gigantic monolith.

Dr. McCallie explains that a rock mass of this kind weathers only at its outer surface instead of breaking up into angular blocks like rock masses that are traversed by joints in cases of layers parallel to its surface. Rock layers of this kind can be seen on many parts of Stone Mountain. They measure from a few inches to several feet in thickness, resembling to a certain extent the concentric layers of an onion.

Stone Mountain is almost wholly barren of soil and in this respect offers a sharp contrast to the plateau which is deeply covered with earth. The general lack of vegetation on the mountain is obviously due to the scarcity of crevices in which any sort of plants can take root.
Most of the trees on Stone Mountain stand in places where fragments of rock layers have accumulated. A few isolated trees are rooted in narrow fissures that traverse layers still in place.

On the steep side of Stone Mountain, the northeast side, there is a sheer declivity that rises, or falls, a distance of over 700 feet. On the other three sides the mountain slopes gradually and the distance on these sides from the base to the summit is more than one mile. The mountain is a little more than a mile in width and more than two miles in length, It is domelike in shape with one side sharply cut off.

A LTERNATE streaks of light and dark gray on the north side of Stone Mountain caused by a "scouring process," resulting from the trickling of water over the surface. Sand in the water scours off the dark lichens in some places, leaving a light gray streak. These streaks stand out conspicuously on the north side, giving it a striped effect.

Recently a movement was launched to carve a memorial to the Confederate soldiers on the north face of Stone Mountain. Work on the memorial actually was started under the direction of Gutzon Borglum, noted sculptor, but has not been carried through to completion. The project still is pending and is being backed by an association organized for the purpose of establishing such a memorial on Stone Mountain.

IS HOST, very fussy as he always was on the morning of his big shoot, came bustling towards Peter, Baron de Grost, with a piece of paper in his hand. The party of men had just descended from a large brake and were standing-about on the edge of the common, examining cartridges, smoking a last cigarette before the business of the day's sport. In the distance, a cloud of dust indicated the approach of a fast traveling motor car.

"My dear Baron," Sir William Boun-derby said, "I want you to change your stand today. I must have a good man at the far corner as the birds go off my hand from there, and Addintgon was miss-ing them shockingly yesterday. Besides, there is a new man coming on your left and I know nothing of his shooting—noth-ing at all!"

"Anywhere you choose to put me, Str William," he assented. "They came badly for Addington yesterday, and well for me. However, I'll do my best."

"I wish people wouldn't bring strangers, especially to the one shoot where I'm so keen about the bag. I told Portal he could bring his brother-in-law, and he's bringing this foreign fellow instead. Don't suppose he can shoot for nuts! Did you ever hear of him, I wonder? The Count von Hern he calls himself.

The motor car had come to a standstill by this time. From it descended Mr. Portal bimself, a large neighboring land owner, a man of culture and travel. With him was Bernadine, in a very correct shooting suit and Tyrolese hat. On the shooting suit and Tyrolese hat. other side of Mr. Portal was a short, thick set man, with olive complexion, keen black eyes, black mustache and imperial, who was dressed in city clothes. Sir William's cyclrows were slightly raised as he advanced to greet the party. Peter was at once profoundly interested.

MR. PORTAL introduced his guests. You will forgive me, I am sure, for bringing a spectator, Bounderby," he said. "Major Kosuth, whom I have the honor to present Major Kosuth, Sir William Lo aderby is high up in the diplomatic service of a country with whom me must feel every sympathy—the young Turks. The Count von Hern, who takes my brather-in-law's place, is probably known to you by name." Sir William welcomed his visitors cordially.

You do not shoot, Major Kosuth?" he asked. "Very seldom," the Turk answered. "I come today with my good friend, Count you Hern, as a spectator, if you permit." "Delighted," Sir William replied. "We will find you a safe place near your friend. The little party began to move toward the wood. It was just at this moment that Bernadine felt a touch upon his shoulder, and, turning around, found Peter by his side.

"An unexpected pleasure, my dear Count," the latter declared, suavely. "I had no idea that you took interest in such simple sports."

The manners of Count von Hern were universally quoted as being almost too perfect. It is a regrettable fact, however, that at that moment he swore softly, perhaps, but with distinct vehemence. A moment later he was exchanging the most cordial of greetings with his old friend.

"You have the knack, my dear De he remarked, "of turning up in the most surprising places. I certainly did not know that among your many accomplishments was included a love for field sports."

Peter smiled quietly. He was a very fine shot, and knew it. .

absence from this country, I fear, has robbed you of an occupation.

'It has certainly deprived life of some of its savor," Peter admitted, blandly. "By the bye," will you not present me to your friend? I have the utmost sympathy with the intrepid political party of which he is a member.'

VON HERN performed the introduction with a reluctance which he wholly failed to conceal. The Turk, however, had been walking on his other side, and his hat was already lifted. Peter had pur-posely raised his voice.

"It gives me the greatest pleasure, Major Kosuth," Peter said, "to welcome you to this country. In common, I believe, with the majority of my country people, I have the utmost respect and admiration for the movement which you represent."

Major Kosuth smiled slowly. His features were heavy and unexpressive. There was something of gloom, however, in the manner of his response.

"You are very kind, Baron," he replied, "and I welcome very much this expression of your interest in my party. I believe that the hearts of your country people are turned towards us in the same manner.
I could wish that your country's political sympathies were as easily aroused. Bernadine intervened promptly.

"Major Kosuth has been here only one day," he remarked, lightly. "I tell him that he is a little too impatient. See, we are approaching the wood. It is as well here to refrain from conversation."

"We will resume it later," Peter said, softly. "I have interests in Turkey, and softly. "I have interests in Turkey, and it would give me great pleasure to have a talk with Major Kosuth."

Peter nodded.

"I will explain after the first drive," he said, turning away.

Peter walked rather quickly until he reached a hend in the wood, and overtaking his host, paused for a moment.

"Lend me a loader for half an hour, Sir William," he begged. "I have to send my servant to the village with a telegrair."

"With pleasure!" Sir William answer-'With pleasure!" Sir William answer-"There are several to spare. I'll send Peter remarked. "There has never been a time when the English nation has not sympathized with the cause of liberty.

"It is not the hearts/of your people," Major Kosuth said, "which I fear. It is the antics of your politicians. Sympathy is a great thing, and good to have, but Turkey today needs more. The heart of a nation is big, but the number of those in whose hands it remains to give practical expression to its promptings, is few."

rent political affairs, but Peter, instead of joining the cheerful afternoon tea par-ty at the close of the day, raked out a file of the Times from the library, and studied it carefully in his room. There studied it carefully in his room. There were one or two items of news concerning which he made pencil notes. He had scarcely finished his task before a servant brought in a dispatch. He opened it with interest and drew pencil and paper towards him. It was from Paris, and in the code which he had learned by heart, no written key of which existed. Carefully he transposed it on to paper and read it through. It was dated from Paris a few hours back.

Peter smiled, grimly but fondly. He uncovered the sheet of paper and placed it in her hands.

"So far," he said, "there isn't much to tell you. Von Hern turned up this morn-ing with a Major Kosuth, who was one of the leaders of the revolution in Tur-key. I wired Paris and this is the reply.

S HE read the message through thoughtfully and handed it back. Peter lit a match, and standing over the fireplace calmly destroyed it.

"A million pounds is not a great sum money," Violet remarked. "Why could not Kosuth borrow it for his country from a private individual?"

"A million pounds is not a large sum to talk about," Peter replied, "but it is an exceedingly large sum for any one, even a multi-millionaire, to handle in cash. And Turkey, I gather, wants it at once. Besides, considerations which might be a security from a government, are no security at all as applied to a private individual."

She nodded.

"Do you think that Kosuth means to go belind the existing treaty and borrow m Germany?"

Peter shook his head.

"I can't quite believe that," he said. "It would mean the straining of diplomatic relations with both countries. It is out of the question."

"Then where does Bernadine come in?" "I do not know," Peter answered.

Violet Jaughed.

"What is that you are going to try and find out?" she asked.

"I am trying to discover who it is that Bernadine and Kosuth are waiting to see," Peter replied. "The worst of it is, I daren't leave here. I shall have to trust to the others.

She glanced at the clock.

"Well, go and dress," she said. "I'm afraid I've a little of your blood in me, after all. Life seems more stirring when Bernadine is on the scene."

Two days later and Peter and his wife returned at once to town. The former found the reports which were awaiting his arrival disappointing. Bernadhe and his guest were not in London, or if they were they had carefully avoided all the usual haunts. Peter read his reports over again, smoked a very long cigar alone in his study, and finally drove down to the city and called upon his stockbroker, who was also a personal friend. Taings were flat in the city, and the latter was glad enough to welcome an important client. began talking the usual market shop until his visitor stopped him.

"I have come to you, Edwardes, morefor information than anything," Peter declared, "although it may mean that I shall need to sell a lot of stock. Can you tell me of any private financier who could raise a loan of a million pounds in cash within the course of a week?

The stockbroker looked dubious.

"In cash," he repeated. "Money isn't raised that way, you know. I doubt whether there are many men in the whole city of London who could put up such an amount with only a week's notice.

"But there must be some one," Peter persisted. "Think! It would probably be a firm or a man not obtrusively English. don't think the Jews would touch it, and a German citizen would be impos-

"It is rather that way," he admitted. "Would your friend, Count von Hern be likely to be concerned in it?"

"And who is Mr. Heseltine-Wrigge?" "A very wealthy American financier," the stockbroker replied, "not at all an unlikely person for a loan of the sort you mention."

"American citizen?" Peter inquired.

"Without a doubt. Of German descent. I should say, but nothing much left of it in his appearance. He settled over here in a huff because New York society wouldn't receive his wife."

"I remember all about it," Peter declared. "She was a chorus girl, wasn't she? Nothing particular against her, but the fellow had no tact. Do you know him, Edwardes?"

EW YORK,—(Special Correspondence.)—It is our theory that everybody is entitled to one parody of "The Walrus and the Carpenter." I decided to draw out my allowance now on a Palm Beach conversation. For never was a time when Mr. Lewis Carroll's large order for a chat could be more appropriately filled.

The time has come, the Walrus said, To talk of many things,

Of ships and shoes and sealing wax. And cabbages and king's (blue).

In the first place, there's sealing wax. I never thought we'd get around to wearing it so soon. But it has appeared on several bonnets designed for the soath. For example, one Milan straw has a rosette of silk floss, the ends of which have been dipped in sealing wax of contrasting tint. This same rosette is repeated on the girdle. Another turban of crepe triple has its two side choux—this word being French for cabbage, one claims right here to be covering another of the Carroll assignments—has its edges

This is only one of the various fanciful elements encountered in clothes designed for southern wear. Another is a trimming of tiny seashells. Cute of us, isn't it, to be cast up on the Florida beach that way? And we do seem to have got around to it before Mr. Neptune. For on some of the most stunning voile frocks brought from Paris we find this trimming detail.

One of such models occurs in white voile with insets of indigo embroidery on sleeves and girdle. Entrenched among these are tiny conch shells colored the same material. This same shell treatment was shown, of course, early in the fall on some of the winter frocks, but the

Voile, by the way, is much to the fore among the lingerie models. Models of this fabric are made usually on long straight lines and offer extended waist boundaries. Their sleeves are any length, from a mere cap to a wide flowing one, and they incline toward the familiar. bateau shaped neck line. Some of the most stunning models make use of bold Czecho_Slovakian embroidery, and for those who feel sure enough of themselves nothing could be smarter than a white voile dress with its wide sleeves decoraced in an allover design of red, green and yellow and its corsage echoing more faintly this pleasant inspiration.

For morning wear in the south every woman should have at least one frock of fine handkerchief linen. These were always well-bred. Now they are popular. Many of them are made so simply that a drawing can give no idea of their charm, a charm which depends now, as always, upon exquisite hand stitches. Many of the new handkerchief linens are tucked. Indeed, this trimming touch appears on all manner of frecks for southern wear. Even some of the georgettes and other crepes avail themselves of the fine pin tucking sponsored so enthusiastically by Rolande.

For a long time back only a baby could dress in pink and still be fashionable. This season that old grim creed has changed, and some of the most charming resort frocks come out in this long discredited color. Along with this is marshalled a number of other dessert-y colors—wonderful shades of green, yellow—most emphatically, yellow—and every tone of blue. (Here we make good on the last words of our parody).

Here is one broad theory about resort wear to which every woman should give heed. A lady without capes is as silly as a continent without 'em. This applies to every kind of garment—homespun, knitted fabrics, serge, and most especially crepes. If you want to be smart you accompany your frock with cape to match. And if you nourish some deep rankling grievance against this garment, you make your coat look as much like one as possible.

At the left we show a white eponge frock—please remember incidentally that eponge is extremely chic this season—worn with a cape_shaped coat of the same material banded in blue and red braid. The hat of white and blue crepe de chine is piped with red braid. This same costume would be equally charming in serge, either white or navy. In fact, it suggests an infinite number of possibilities.

In many years of fashion service I have suffered prostration of my taffeta adjectives. So I shall content myself with the remark that the frock of this material is being widely utilized for both afternoon and evening models. Second from the left is a brown taffeta adapted from one of Jenny's mid-season models. This is interesting because of the three draped flounces held in the center of a triangular draped piece of self material by a mother of pearl buckle. Mother of pearl is one of those mothers just about as attractive as daughter herself, and Jenny has made use of it as buttons, buckles, and, indeed, makes whole girdles of it. Over here we are following her example, and even some of the resort millinery chooses this substance for trimming.

Lattice work! By spring we shall all be latticed as an Elizabethan window. It is much used on midseason serges and gabardines, and on the organdy dresses for southern wear it is a favored thought. Second from the right a frock of violet blue organdy over a slip of pink organdy makes use of a first cousin of this treatment effectively. The hat of matching gros de Londres is faced with self-colored leghorn.

One of the most fashionable of millinery combinations—that of faille and straw—is located at the right in a black faille hat wreathed with green dahlias and faced with bright yellow Milan straw. With this a frock of green organdy is trimmed with Valenciennes extending to the sas.

CHAPTER I.

F Edmund Stonewall's antecedents I know only that, in a moderate way, he was wealthy, and that he had no immediate family ties. He was somewhere near thirty years of age, and held the diploma of one of our oldest universities. He was not, in a general way, sociable, nevertheless he was a member of the Olympus club. But he made very few acquaintances even there, and I believe that except myself, Jack Ashton, Henry Darton and Will Church, he had no inmates. And we knew him only at the club. There, when he was alone with us, he sometimes partly opened up his mind, and we were charmed by his variety of knowledge and the singularity of his con-

There was one subject on which he was particularly eloquent—radioactivity; that most strange property of matter whose dis-covery had been the crowning glory of science in the closing decade of the nine-teenth century. I recall his saying, on one occasion:

"Listen to this! Here's Professor Thomson declaring that a single grain of radium contains in its padlocked atoms energy enough to lift a million tons three hundred yards high. Professor Thomson is too mod est in his estimates, and he masn't the ghost of an idea how to get at that energy. Neither has Professor Rutherford, nor Lord Kelvin; but somebody will get at it. just the same.

For a considerable time afterwards we saw nothing of Stonewall. He did not come to the club, and we were beginning to think of looking him up, when one evening, quite unexpectedly, he dropped in, wearing an unusually cheerful expression. He had no sooner shaken hands than he said, with ppressed excitement in his voice:

"Well, I've 'got at it.'"
"Got at what?" drawled Jack. The inter-atomic energy. I've got it un-

"The deuce you have!" said Jack.

"Yes, I've arrived where a certain professor dreamed of being when he averred when man knows that every breath of air he draws has contained within self force enough to drive the workshops of the world he will find out some day, some how, some way of tapping that energy. The thing is done, for I've tapped it!" We stared at one another, not knowing what to say, except Jack, who, inspired by the spirit of mischief, drawled out: "Ah, yes, I remember. Well, then, Edmund, what are you going to do with it?" There was not really any thought among us of poking fun at Edmund; we respected and admired him far too much for that; nevertheless, catching the infection of banter from Jack, we united in demanding in a manner which I can now see must have appeared most provoking:

"Why, yes, Edmand, tell us what you are going to do with it."

Stonewall's eyes flashed and his cheek darkened, but for a moment he said nothing. Presently, with a return of his for-mer affability, he said:

"I wish you would come over to the lab-oratory and let me show you what I am going to do."

Nothing could have pleased us better than this invitation, for we had long been dying to see the inside of Edmund's laboratory. We all got our hats and started out with him. We knew where he lived, occupying a whole house though he was a bachelor, but none of us had ever seen the He led us directly into the back yard, half of which we were surprised to find inclosed and roofed over, forming a huge shanty, like a workshop. Edmund opened the door and ushered us in.

A remarkable object at once concentrat ed our attention. In the center of the place was the queerest looking thing that you can well imagine. I can hardly describe it. It was round and elongated like a boiler, with bulging ends, and seemed to be made of polished steel. Its total length was about eighteen feet, and its width ten Edmund approached it and opened a door in the end, which was wide and high enough for us to enter without stooping or crowding.

"Step in, gentiemen," ne said, and un-hesitatingly we obeyed him, all except Church, who for some unknown reason mained outside, and when we looked for him he had disappeared. Edmund turned on a bright light, and we found ourselves in an oblong cham beautifully fitted up with polished wood-work, and leather cushioned seats running round the sides. Many metallic knobs and handles shone on the walls.

"Sit down," said Edmund, "and I will tell you what I have got here. As I was telling you at the club, I've solved the mystery of the atoms. I've got unlimited power at my command. These knobs and handles that you see are my keys for turning it on and off, and controlling it as I wish. Perhaps I had better show you, instead of telling you, what I mean. Excuse me a moment."

tle stepped out of the door, and we re mained seated. We heard a noise outside like the opening of a barn door, and im-mediately Edmund reappeared and closed the door of the chamber in which we were With a singular smile he pressed a knob on the wall, and instantly we felt that the days from the the got thereof

"Look here, Edmund," Jack exclaimed.
"I didn't give you permission to carry me off in this way, and I want to know what you mean by it and what you are about."

And Henry, too, who was ordinarily as the as a clam, broke out still more hotly: "See here! I've had enough of this thing! as go down and let me out. I won't be tried off so, against my will and knowl-what are you going to do with your atomic balloon?

Edmund's eyes flashed. "You'll see in a minute."

The scene out of the window was beautiful. Away off over the New Jersey horizon noticed the planet Venus, as brilliant as a diamond. I am fond of star-gazing, and I called Edmund's attention to the planet.

"Lovely, isn't she?" he said with enthusiasm. "The finest world in the solar system, and what a strange thing that she should have one side always day and the other always night."

I was surprised by his exhibition of as-tronomic lore, for I had never known that he had given any attention to the subject, but a minute later the incident was forgotten as Edmund suddenly pushed us back from the window and closed the shutter.

"Going down again so soon?" asked Jack. Edmund smiled. "Going," he said simply, and put his hand to one of the knobs. Immediately we felt ourselves moving. We expected at each instant to feel the car touch the cradle in which it had evidently rested, but never were three mortals so

It is true that you are in my power at present, but if you now say that you do not wish to be concerned in what I assure you will prove the most wonderful enterprise ever undertaken by human beings, I will go back to the shed and let you out.

Henry was more backward. But his cart-osity, too, was aroused, and at length he gave in his voice with the others.

'And now," Jack continued, "tell as all about it. Where are we going?"
"Pardon me, Jack," was Edmund's reply,

"but I'd rather keep that for a surprise. You shall know everything in good time." Finally all got out their pipes, and began to make ourselves at home, for truly, as far as luxurious furniture was concerned, we were as comfortable as at the Olymclub, and the motion of the strange craft was so smooth and regular that it

"Aren't you a little surprised that this sail room is not choking full of smoke?"
"By Jo," exclaimed Jack, "that's so!"

"The smoke," said Edmund impressively, "has been turned into atomic energy to speed us on our way. I'm glad you're all spead us on our way. I'm glad you're all good smokers, for that saves fuel. Look," he continued, while we amazed, stared at him, "those fellows there have been swallowing your smoke, and glad to get it."

He pointed at a row of what seemed to e grinning steel mouths, barred with inbe grinning steel mouths, barred with in-numerable black teeth, and half concealed by a protecting ledge at the bottom of the wall opposite the entrance, and as I look-ed I was thrilled by the sight of faint curls of smoke disappearing within their gaping

None of us knew what to say; our aston-hment was beyond speech.

Another hour passed, and all of us, I think, had fallen into a done, when Edmund aroused by saying:

"I'll have to keep the first watch, and all the others, too, this night."
"So then we're not going to land to

"No, not tonight, and you may as well turn in. You see that I have prepared good, comfortable bunks, and I think you'll make

As Edmund spoke he lifted the tops from some of the benches along the walls, and revealed excellent beds, ready for occu-

"I believe I have forgotten nothing that we shall really need," he added. "Beds, arms, instruments, books, clothing, furs and good things to eat."

Again we looked at one another in surprise, but nobody spoke, although the same thought probably occurred to each—that this promised to be a pretty long trip, judging from the preparations.

When I woke, windows were open on both sides of the car, and brilliant sunshine was streaming in through one of them Henry was still asleep, Jack was yawning in his bank, and Edmund stood at one of the windows staring out. I made a quick toilet, and hastened to Edmund's side.

"Good morning," he said heartily, taking my hand. "Look out here, and tell me what you think of the prospect."

As I put my face close to the thick but very transparent glass covering the window, my heart jumped into my mouth!

"In heaven's name, where are we?" 1 cried out.

We appeared to be at an infinite elevation, and the sky, as black as ink, was ablaze with stars, although the bright sunlight was streaming into the opposite wid-

"Phew!" whistled Jack, suddenly catching sight of it and fixing his eyes in a stare, "what's that?"

That's the earth!"

It was Edmund who spoke, looking at s with a quizzical smile. A shock ran through my nerves, and for an instant my brain whirled. I saw that it was the truth that he had uttered, for his words had hardrounded out and hardened and the dece tion vanished, and I recognized, as clearly as ever I saw them on a school globe, the outlines of Asia and the Pacific ocean!

We made a fairly good run during the night. You must be hungry by this time, for you've slept late; suppose we have

After a time I noticed that Edmund was ontinually going from one window to the other and looking out with an air of anxfety. He seemed to be watching for something, and there was a look of mingled expectation and apprehension in his eyes. At last I asked him:

"What are you looking for, Edmund?" "Meteors."

"Meteors, out here!"

"Of course. You're something of an hstronomer; don't you know that they hang about all the planets? They didn't give me any rest last night. We passed some pretty ugly fellows while you slept, I can tell you! It's not as dangerous as it was, but there may be some of them yet around re. I'll feel safer when we have put a few more million miles behind us.

"In the name of all that's good, Edmund," cried Jack, "at what rate are we traveling,

"Just at present," Edmund replied, glanc-ing at an indicator, "we're making twenty miles a second."

"Why," I exclaimed, "that's faster than the earth moves in its orbit!"

"Yes, a trifle faster; but I'll probably have to work up to a little better speed in order to get where I want to go before our goal begins to run away from us."

"Ah, there you are," said Jack. "That's what I wanted to know. What is our goal? Where are we going?"

Before Edmund could reply we all sprang to our feet in affright. A loud grating noise had broken upon our ears. At the same instant the car gave a lurch, and a blaze of the most vicious lightning streamed through a window.

"Confound the things!" shouted Edmund, springing to the window, and then darting to one of his knobs and beginning to twist it with all his force.

In a second we were sprawling on the floor—all except Edmund, who kept his hold on the knob. Our course had been changed with amazing quickness, and our startled eyes beheld a huge misshapen object darting past the window.

"Here comes another!" cried Edmund, again seizing the knob.

beheld a huge misshapen object darting past the window.

"Here comes another!" cried Edmund, again seizing the knab.

i had managed to get my face to the window, and I certainly thought we were done for. Apparently only a few rods away and rushing straight at the ear, was a wast black mass, shaped something like a dumbbell, with ends as big as houses, tumbling over and over, and threatening us with annihilation. If it hit us, as it seemed sure that it would do, I knew that we should never return to the earth, unless in the form of pulverized ashes!

Chapted II-The Caverns of Venus.

Chapted II—The Caveras of Venus.

But Edmund had seen the meteor sooner than I, and as quick as thought he swerved the car, and threw us all off our feet ones more. But we should have been thankful if he had broken our heads, since he had saved us from instant destruction.

The danger, however, was not yet passed. Scarcely had the immense dumb-bell (which Edmund declared must have been composed of solid iron, so great was its effect on his needles) disappeared, before there came from outside a blaze so fierre that it fairly slapped our lids shut.

"A collision!" Edmund exclaimed. "The thing has struck another big meteor."

He threw himself flat on the floor, and stared out of a peephole. Then he jumped to his feet and gave us another tumble.

"They're all about us," he faltered, breath-less with exertion.

Even in the midst of our terror we could not but admire our leader. His resources seemed boundless, and our confidence in him grew with every escape. While he kept guard at the peepholes we watched for meteors from the windows. We must have come almost within striking distance of a thousand in the course of an hour, but Edmund decided not to diminish our speed, for he said that he could control the car quicker when it was under full headway.

So on we rushed, dodging the things like a crow in a flock of pestering jays, and we really enjoyed the excitement. It was more fascinating sport than shooting rapids in a careening skiff, and at last we grew so confident that we were rather sorry when the last meteor passed, and we found ourselves once more in open, unimpeded space. After that the time passed quietly. We ate our meals and went to bed and rose as regularly as if we had been at home. In ona respect, however, things were very different from what they were on the earth. We had no night! The sun shone continuelly, although the sky was black and always glittering with stars. We kept count of the days by the aid of a calender clock.

Once the idea suddenly came to me that it was astonishing that we had not lon going, anyway?"

"Well," Edmund replied, "since we have become pretty good shipmates, I don't see any objection to tell you. We are going to Venus."

Venus."

"Going to Venus!" we all cried in a breath.

"To be sure. Why not? We've got the proper dort of conveyance, haven't we?"

There was no denying that. Our conveyance had already brought us some million miles out into space; why, indeed, should it not be able to carry us to Venus, or any miles out into space; why, indeed, should it not be able to carry us to Venus, or any other planet?

"How far is it to Venus?" asked Jack.

"When we quit the earth," Edmund answered, "Venus was rapidly approaching inferior conjunction. You know what that is," addressing me, "it's when the planet comes between the sun and the earth. The distance from the earth is not always the same at such a conjunction, but I figured out that on this occasion, after allowing for the circuit we should have to make, there would be just twenty-seven millien miles to travel. At an average speed of twenty miles a second we could do that distance in fifteen days, fourteen and one-half hours. But, of course, I had to lose some time going slow through the earth's atmosphere, for otherwise the car would have taken fire, like a meteor, on account of the friction. Then, too, I shall have to slow up on entering the atmosphere of Venus, which appears to be very deep and dense; so upon the whole, I don't count on landing upon Venus in less than sixteen days from the time of our departure. We've already been out five days, and within eleven more I expect to introduce you to the inhabitants of another world."

The inhabitants of another world! Again Edmund had thrown out an idea which took us all sback.

"Do you believe there are any inhabius all aback.

"Do you believe there are any inhabitants on Venus!" I asked at length.

"Certainly. I know there are."

The time ran on, and we watched anxiously the day-hand of the calendar clock. Soon it had marked a week; then ten days; then a fortnight. We were now approaching Venus from the east—flanking her, so to speak—and Edmund described her appearance as that of an enormous crescent. Finally he invited us to take a look for ourselves.

I shall never forget that first view! It was only a glimpse, for Edmund was nervous about meteors again, and would allow us only a moment at the peephole because he wished to be continually on the watch himself. Jut, brief as was the view, that yast pleaming siekle hanging in the black sky was the most tremendous thing I ever looked upon!

Soon afterwards Edmund changed the ceurse, and then we saw her no more. We had not come upon the swarms of meteora that Edumund had expected to find lurking about the planet, and he mid that he new felt aafe in running into her shadow, and making a landing on her night hemisphere. You will allow me to remind you that Schiaparelli had long before found out that Venus doesn't turn on her'axis once every twenty-four hours, like the earth, hut keeps always the same face to the sun; the consequence being that she has perpetual day on one side and perpetual night on the other. I asked Edmund why he should not rather land on the daylight side; but he replied that his plan was safer, and that we could easily go from one side to the other wherever we chose.

When we swung round into the shadow of the planet we got her between the sun and ourselves, and as she completely hid the sun, we now had perpetual night about the ear. Out of the peephole she looked like a stupendous black circle, blacker than the sky itself, but round the rim was a beautiful ring of light.

"That's her atmosphere," Edmund explained, "lighted up by the sun from behind. But, for the life of me, I cannot tell what those immense flames mean."

He referred to a vast circle of many-colored spires that blazed and flickered like a burning rainbow at the inner edge of the ring of light. It was one of the most awful, and yet beautiful, sights that I had ever gamed upon.

Our approach was so rapid that the immense black circle grew visibly minute by minute. Soon it was so large that we could no longer see its boundaries through the peephole in the floor.

"We're now within a thousand miles," said Edmund, "and must be close to the upper limits of the atmosphere. I'll have to slow down, or else we'll be burnt up by the heat of frietion."

Soon we were so close that the surface of the planet became dimly visible, simply from the starlight. We were now settling down

Soon we were so close that the surface of the planet became dimly visible, simply from the starlight. We were now settling down very cautiously, and presently we began to notice curious shafts of light which appeared to issue from the ground, as if the surface beneath us had been sprinkled with iron founderies.

"Aha!" cried Edmund, "I believe there are inhabitants on this side after all. Those lights don't come from volcanoes. Pm going to make for the nearest one, and we'll soon know what they are."

Accordingly we steered for one of the gleaming shafts. It was a thrilling moment, I can tell you—that when we first saw another world than ours under our fest! As we appreached the light it threw a pale illumination on the ground around. Everything appeared to be perfectly flat and level. It was like dropping down at night upon a vast prairie. But the features of the landscape were indistinguishable in the gloom. Edmund boldly continued to approach until we were within a hundred feet of the shaft of light, which we could now perceive issued directly from the ground. Suddenly, with the stightest perceptible bump, we touched the soil, and the car came to rest. We had landed on Venus!

"It's unquestions by frightfully cold outside," said Edmund, "and we'll now put on these things."

side," said Edmund, "and we'll new put on these things."

He dragged our or one of his many lockers four suits of thick fur garments, and as many pairs of fur gloves, together with caps and shields for the face, leaving only mirrow openings for the eyes. When we had got them on we locked like so many Esquimaux. Finally Edmund handed each of us a pair of small automatic pistols, telling us to put them where they would be handy in our side pockets.

Our preparation, being made, we opened the door. The air that rushed in almost hardened us into icicles!

"It won't hurt you," said Edmund in a whisper. "It can't be down to absolute zero on account of the dense atmosphere. You'll get used to it in a few minutes. Come on."

His whispering gave us a sense of imminent danger, but nevertheless we followed as he led the way straight toward the shaft of light. On nearing it we saw that it came out of an irregularly round hole in the ground. When we got yet nearer we were astonished to see rough steps which led down into the pit. The next instant we were frozen in our tracks! For a moment my heart stopped beating. Standing on the steps, just below the level of the ground and intently watching us, was a creature shaped like a man, but more savage looking than a gorilla!

For two or three minutes the creature continued to stare at us, motionless; and we

For two or three minutes the creature continued to stare at us, motionless; and we stared at him. It was so dramatic that it makes my nerves tingle new when I think of it. His eyes alone were enough to harrow up your soul. Huge beyond belief, round and luminous as full moons, they were filled with the phosphorescent greenish-yellow glare that sometimes appears in the expanded pupils of a cat or a wild beast. The great hairy head was black, but the stocky body was as white as a polar bear. The arms were apelike and very long and muscular, and the entire aspect of the creature betokened immense strength and activity.

Edmund was the first to recover from the stupor of surprise, and instantly he did a thing so apparently absurd but so marvelous in its calculated effect that no brain but his thing so apparently absurd but so marvelous in its calculated effect that no brain but his could have conceived it.

"Well, hello, you!" he called out in a voice of such stentorian power that we jumped as at a thunderclap. The effect on the strange brute was electric. A film shot across the big eyes, he leaped into the air, uttering a squeak that was ridiculous, coming from an animal of such size and strength, and instantly disappeared, tumbling down the steps.

But we were as much frightened as the ugly monster himself. We stared at Edmund, speechless in our amazement. Never could I have believed it possible for such a voice to issue from the human throat. It was not the voice of our friend, nor the voice of a man at all, but an indescribable clangor; and the words I have quoted had been scarcely distinguishable, so shattered were they by the crash of sound that whirled them into our astonished ears. Then the truth burst upon me, and I exclaimed:

"It's the atmosphere!"

I had not spoken very loudly, but the words seemed to reverberate in my mouth, as if to testify to the correctness of my explanation.

"Yes," said Edmund, taking pains to mederate his voice, "you've hit it, it's the atmosphere. Science demonstrated long ago that the atmosphere of Venus is extraordinarily extensive and dense, from which fact I inferred that we should encounter some wonderful accentic phenomena here, and this was in my mind when, on stepping out of the cas, I addressed you in a whisper. The reaction even of the whisper on my organs of speech told me that I was right. When we caught sight of the creature at the top of the pit I had no desire to shoot him, and I saw that he was too powerful to be captured alive. In a second I had decided what to do. It ran through my mind that, in a world where the density, and probably something also in the peculiar constitution of the air, had the effect of wastly magnifying sound, had the check of wastly magnifying sound, the phonetic and acoustic organs of the inhabitants would be medified, and that the sounds uttered by them would be much fainter than those that we are accustomed to hear from living creatures on the earth. That being so, I argued that a very great and heavy sound coming from a strange animal would produce in the creature before us a paralyzing terror. You have seen that it did so. We have already inspired so great a fear that I believe wa can now safely follow the creature into its habitation, and encounter without danger any of its congeners that may be there. Nevertheless, I chall not sak you to run any risks, and I will alone descend into the pit."

"If you do, may I be hanged for sheep stealing!"

You will guess at once that it was Jack who had spoken thus.

and I will alone descend into the pit."

"If you do, may I be hanged for sheep stealing!"

You will guess at once that it was Jack who had spoken thus.

"No, sir," he continued, "if you go, we all go. Isn't that so, boys?"

In answer to an appeal thus put, neither Henry nor myself could have hung back even if we had had the disposition to do so.

And so we began our destent into the mysterious pit The strange light that came from it, and formed a shaft in the desse atmosphere above like sunlight in a haymow, was accompanied by a considerable degree of heat, which was very grateful to our lungs, after the frigid plunge that we had taken from the comfortable car. As we descended, the temperature continually rose until we were glad to throw off our Arctic togs, and leave them on a shelf of rock to await our return.

It was an awful hole for depth. The steps, rudely cut, wound round and round the sides like those in a cathedral tower, but the pit was not perfectly circular. It looked like a natural formation, such as the vertical entrance to a limestone cavern, or the throat of a sleeping volcane.

When we had descended perhaps as much as two hundred feet, we suddenly found ourselves in a broad cavern with a surprisingly level floor. The temperature had been steady rising all the time, and here it was as warm as in an ardinary living room. The cavern appeared to be about twenty yards broad and eight or tan feet in height, with a flat roof of rock. It was dimly illuminated by a small heap of what seemed to be hard coal, burning in a wary roughly constructed brazier, which, as far as looks went, one would have said was constructed of iron.

There was not a living creature in sight, but over in a corner I detected a broad hole, here which the stans continued to would have said was constructed of iron.

There was not a living creature in sight, but over in a corner I detected a broad hole, down which the steps continued to descend.

"Here's the way," said Edmund, discovering the steps at the same moment. "Down we go."

He again led the way, and we resumed the descent. The steps, precisely like those above, wound round and round and led us down I should say as much as three hundred feet before we entered another cavern, larger and loftier than the first.

And there we found them!

Ranged stong the farther side of the cavern, and visible in the light of another glowing heap in the center, were as many as thirty of those huge hairy creatures standing shoulder to shoulder, their great eyes gharing like bull's-eye lanterns. But the thing that filled us with terror was their motions.

thing that filled us with terror was their motions.

You have read, with thrilling nerves, how a huge cobra, reared on his coils, sways his terrible head from side to side before striking. Well, all those black heads before us were swaying in unison, but with a sickening circular movement, which was regularly reversed in direction. Three times by the right and then three times by the left those heads circled, in rhythmic cadence, while the luminous eyes seemed to leave phosphorescent rings in the air, intersecting one another in consequence of the rapidity of the motion. It was baleful. It was the chasm of the serpent fascinating his terrified prey. In an instant I feit my brain turning, and I staggered in spite of my utmost efforts. A kind of paralysis stiffened my limbs.

Presently, all moving tagether, and uttering a hissing, whistling sound, they began slowly to approach us, heeping in line, each shaggy leg lifted at the same moment, like so many solders on parade, while the heads continued to awing, and the glowing eyes to cut linked circles in the air. But for Edmund we should certainly have been lost. Standing a little to the fore, he spoke to us over his shoulder, in a low voice:

"Take out your pistols, but don't shoot unless they make a rush. Then kill as many where, and I think that will be enough."

We could as easily have stirred our arms if we have been marble statues, but he promptly had his pistol, and the explosion followed on the instant. The report was like an earthquake. It shocked us into our senses and almost out of them again. The weight of the air and the confinement of the eavern magnified and concentrated the sound so that it was awful beyond belief. The fellow in the center was hurled back as if shot from a catapault, and the others fell flat as he, and lay there groveling.

Edmund boldly approached and pushed with his foot the furry body of the one he had shot. The bulket had gone through his head. At Edmund's approach the creatures sank lower on the tocky floor, and those nearest him turned up their moon eyes with an expression of submission and supplication that was grotesque. He motioned us to join him and, imitating him, we began to pat and smooth the shrinking bodies until, understanding that we would not hurt them, they gradually acquired confidence.

In the meantime the crowd in the cavern increased, others coming in through side passages, and exhibiting the utmost astonishment at the spectacle which greeted them. It was clear that those who had taken part in the opening scene imparted to the newcomers a knowledge of the situation of affairs, and we could see that our prestige was thoroughly established. It remained to utilize our advantage, and we looked to Edmund to show how it should be done. He was equal to the undertaking, but I shall not trouble you with the details of his diplomacy. Let it suffice to say that by a combination of gentleness and firmness he quickly reduced almost the entire population of the caverns (for, as we afterwards discovered, there were a dozen or more of these underground dwellings connected by periods.) passages through the rocks) into subjection to his will.

As we became better acquainted with the cave dwellers we found that they were by no means as savage as they looked. Their

As we became better ecquainted with the cave dwellers we found that they were by no means as savage as they looked. Their appearance was certainly grotesque, and even unaccountable. Why, for instance, should their heads have been covered uith coarse black disordered hair while their bodies, from the neck down, were almost beautiful with a natural raiment of golden white, as soft as silk and ax hrilliant as floss? The immense size of their eyes did not seem astonishing after we began to reflect upon the consequences of the relative lack of light in their world. It was but a natural adjustment to their environment; with such eyes they could see in the dark better than cats.

We found that in seme of the winding passages connecting the caverns they cultivated food. It consisted entirely of vegetables of various kinds, and all unlike any that I ever saw on the earth. Water dripped from the roofs of these particular passages, and the almost colorless vegetation thrived there with astonishing luxuriance. They had many simple ways of cooking their food, and it was evident that they possessed some form of salt.

Although we still had abundance of food in the car, Edmund insisted on trying theirs, and it proved to be very palatable.

The only brute animals that we saw in the caverns were some Caglike creatures, about as large as terriers, but very furry, which showed the utmost terror whenever we appeared.

Not long afterward we made a discovery of extreme intracet. It was actioned in the case of the c as large as terriers, but very furry, which showed the utmost terror whenever we appeared.

Not long afterward we made a discovery of extreme interest. It was nothing less than a big smithy, with several stout fellows pounding out rude tools with equally rude hammers of iron. Of course we could ask them no questions, for their language was only a kind of squeak, and they seemed to converse mostly by means of expressive signs. But Edmund was not long in drawing his conclusions.

"This," he said, after closely examining the metal, "is a native iron. There's nothing remarkable in the fact that it should be here. All the solid planets, as you know (turning to me), "are very largely composed of iron. Now I'll make another grediction—we are going to find coal here."

He approached the wall of the cavern containing the smithy, and immediately exclaimed:

"Look here! Here it is!"

And sure enough, on joining him we saw asam of as fine anthracite as Pennsylvanis ever produced.

"A Carboniferous Age of Venus!" Edmund continued. "What do you think of that?

And sure enough, on joining him we saw asam of as fine anthracite as Pennsylvania ever produced.

"A Carboniferous Age of Venus!" Edmund continued. "What do you think of that? But, of course, it was sure to be so; all the planets that are ald enough have been through practically the same stages."

We all mused for a time on the subject that Edmund had started, when suddenly his face lighted up with the greatest animation, and he exclaimed:
"I should like to take some of these people with us when we visit the other hemisphere. I'll have iron sleds made, put the natives upon them hitch them by wire cables to the car, and away we'll spin. The ground is as flat and smooth as a prairie, and moreover, is coated with an icy covering."

Some one came in where we were and called off the workmen, who went out with the others in great haste. Of course we followed at their heels. On reaching the principal covern, we found a singular scene. Two natives, whom we had never seen before, were evidently in charge of some kind of a ceremony. They were tail, conical hats made of polished metal and covered with hieroglyphics, and carried staves of iron in their hands.

"Priests," Edmund immediately whispered. "Now we'll see something interesting."

The "priests" marshaled all the others, numbering several hundred, into a long column, and then began a slow, solemn march up the steps. We reascended and stepped out into the Arctic night, finding the crawd assembled not far from the entranee to the cavern. The frosty sky was ablaze with stars, and directly overhead shone a planet of amaxing size and splendor with a little one beside it.

"The earth and the moon!" exclaimed Edmund.

"The earth and the moon!" exclaimed Edmund.

I cannot describe the flood of feeling that went over me at that sight! But in a moment Edmund interrupted my meditation by saying, in a quick, nervous way:

"Look at that!"

The natives had formed themselves in a circle with the two priests standing in the center All but these two had dropped on their knees, while the leaders, elevating their long arras toward the zenith, gazed upward, uttering a kind of chant in their queer squeaking voices.

"Bon't you see what they're about?" demanded Edmund, twitching me by the aleeve. "They're worshiping the carth!"

It was the truth—the amaning truth! They were worshiping our planet in the skyl And, indeed, she looked worth worshiping. Never have I seen so splendid a star.

Suddenly the two priests began to pirouette, and as they whirled more and more rapidly, their huge glowing eyes made phosphorescent circles in the gloom. Now for the first time I caught sight of an oblong object rising a couple of feet above the ground in the center of the circle. I was wondering what it might be when the spinning priests, who had gradually drawn closer to the ring of worshipers, dived into the circle, and, catching each a native in his arms, ran with their captives to it.

"It's a sacrificial atone!" exclaimed Edmund. "They're going to kill them as an offering to the earth and her child the moon."

I was frozen with horror at the sight, but just as the second priest reached the altar, offering to the earth and her child the moon."

I was frozen with horror at the sight, but just as the second priest reached the altar, where the first victim had already been pinned with the sharp point of the macrificial staff, his captive, suddenly recovering his senses, and terrified by the awful fate confronting him, uttered a cry, wrenehed himself loose, and running like the wind, leaped over the circle and disappeared in the darkness.

The enraged priest was after him like lightning, and as he came near us his awful eyes seemed to emit actual flames. But the runner had vanished. Without an instant's hesitation the priest shot out his great arm and caught me by the throat! In another second I felt myrelf carried in a bound, as if a tiger had seized me, toward the horrible altar.

Bang!

Something touched me, and I felt the warm blood gushing. Then I knew no more.

In the midst of a dream of boyhood scenes a murmur of familiar voices awoke me. I opened my eyes, but as I could not make out where I was, closed them again.

Then I heard Edmund saying:

"He's coming out all right."

Back in the cavern! Then, suddenly, memory returned,

Back in the cavern! Then, suddenly, memory returned.

"When that fellow snatched you up and leaped inside the circle," said Edmund, "I had my furs wrapped so closely around me that for quite ten seconds I was unable to get out my pistol. I tore the garment open just in time. I didn't waste any time finding my aim, but even as it was the iron point had touched you when the bullet cranhed through his brain. The shock swerved his weapon a little and you were only wounded in the shoulder. The fellow fell dead beside you, and under the circumstances I felt compelled to shoot the other one also, for he was insane with delirium."

"How long have I been here?" I asked.

"How long have I been here?" I asked.
"Two days. I never saw a man so knocked out by a shock. But look at yourself."
He held a pocket mirror before me, and then I saw that my hair was streaked with

"But we haven't been idle in the meanwhile," Edmund went on. "I've got two sleds nearly completed."

"How in the world could you have worked so fast?" I asked in surprise.

"Because the blacksmiths worked well, and showed surprising intelligence in comprehending my directions. Perhaps that was because I had learned their language."

cause I had learned their language."

"Learned their language!" I exclaimed, staring in amazement.

"Well, perhaps that's putting it a little too strong; but I have learned enough to establish a pretty good understanding with them. It's a subject that I may be better able to discuss after I have learned more about it. All I can say at present is that it appears to be a kind of telepathy. They are able to cenverse, partly by physical signs, but more, I am cure, by some means which they possess of transferring thought without the mediation of any sense familiar to us. They certainly are able to read some of my thoughts when we are in close relations and working together. One of them is especially gifted in this way, and what do you think? I have discovered his name!"

"Now, Edmund—" I began incredulously.

"Yes," he persisted, "it's a fact. As near as I can imitate it, it sounds something like Juba.' So that's what I call him, and he's going to be the chief of the party that I propose to take with us."

My wound was very slight, and the effects of the whole having assead. I was seen have going to be the chief of the party that I propose to take with us."

My wound was very slight, and the effects of the shock having passed, I was soon busy with the others in making the final preparations for our departure. The sleds yere, of course, very rude affairs, but they were also very strong. Among the innumerable stores which Edmund's foresight had led him to put into the car were a number of exceedingly strong but light metallic cables. With these the two sleds were hitched, one behind the other, and a line about a kundred feet long connected them with the car.

The sleds were provisioned from the stores of the natives, and we also took some af their food in the car, not only to eke out our own but because we had come to like it.

Edmund had already chosen the fellows who were to accompany us, and among them were two of the smiths besides Juba. In all they were eight. How he succeeded in persuading them I do not know.

At least five hundred natives assembled in a furry crowd around the entrance to the caverns to see us off. When we started; the fellows on the sleds, being unused to the motion, clung together like so many awkward white bears taking a ride in the circus.

Then we began gradually to put on speed, and as the ground was icy smooth and entirely unobstructed, we were soon traveling at the rate of sixty miles an hour. The plan of the sleds werked like magic, and after their terror had passed away it was plain to be seen that the natives enjoyed the new sensation immensely.

Having, as Edmund had calculated, about five thousand miles to go before reaching the edge of the sun-illuminated hemisphere, it was evident that, at our present rate of progress, we should arrive there in a little over two days by the calendar clock. The time passed, without entail, until, unexpectedly, a new phenomenon captured our attention.

Ahead, through the peephole, Edmund had descried again the flaming spires which had so a noished us on our approach to Venus. But now their appearance was splendid and imposing beyond words.

"There is the old mystery again," exclaimed Edmund. "The arc of light above is natural enough; it's simply the dawn. The sun never enough; it's simply the dawn. The sun never rises on this side of Venus, but it will rise for us because we are approaching it. But those flames! See how steady they are as a whole, and yet how they change color like a slowly turning prism. I'll try to think it ant."

whole, and yet how they change color like a slowly turning prism. I'll try to think it out."

He had been sitting silent in his corner, when suddenly he slapped his 'thigh, and springing to his feet, exclaimed:

"They're mountains of crystal!"

"Mountains and I am ashamed not to have foreseen the thing. It's plain enough when you come to think about it. Remember that Venus being a world lying half in the daylight and half in the night, its necessarily as hot on one side as it is cold on the other. All of the clouds and floating vapors are on the day side, where the sunbeams act. The heated air charged with moisture rises over the sunward hemisphere, and flows off above, on all sides, toward the night side, while from the latter cold air flows in beneath to take its place. Along the junction of the two hemispheres the clouds and moisture are condensed by the intense cold, and fall in ceaseless snowstorms. This snow descending for ages has piled up in mountainous masses whose height may be increased in some places by real mountain ranges buried beneath. The atmospheric moisture cannot pass very far into the night hemisphere without being condensed, and so it is all arrested within a ring, or band, extending completely around the planet, and marking the division between perpetual day and perpetual night. The appearance of gi-gantic flames is produced by the sunbeams striking these mountains of ice and snow from behind and breaking into prismatic fire."

We listened to this explanation so simple

We listened to this explanation, so simple nd yet so wonderful, with mingled feelings f astonishment and admiration.

In a few minutes Edmund addressed us again.

"I foresee now," he said, "considerable trouble for us. I've naticed for some time that a wind, getting gradually stronger, has been following us. It is likely that this wind gets to be a perfect hurricane in the neighborhood of those strange mountains. 'It is the back suction, caused, as I have already told you, by the rising of the heated air on the sunny side of the planet. It may play the deuce with us when we get into the midst of it."

the deuce with us when we get into the midst of it."

He immediately reduced the speed to not more than ten miles an hour, and at once we noticed the wind of which he had spoken. It came now in great gusts from behind, rapidly increasing in frequency and fury. Soon it was strong enough to drive the sleds without any pull upon the cable, and sometimes they were forced directly under the car, and even shead of it, the native clinging to one another in the utmost terror.

By this time we were getting into the ice, huge hills of which surrounded us. Edmund dropped the car in the lee of one of these strange hummocks. Lashing the two sleds together we attached them about ten feet below the bottom of the car. Then the natives, who had been unbound, and had stood looking on in utter bewilderment, were securely fastened on the sleds. We entered the car and the power was turned on.

"We'll rise straight up," said Edmund, "and as soon as we are out of the wind current we will sail over the mountains and come down on the other side as nice as you please."

No sooner had we risen out of the protecrent we will sail over the mountains and come down on the other side as nice as you please."

No sooner had we risen out of the protection of the hill of ice than the hurricane caught us. It was a blast of such power and ferocity that in an instant it had the car as if they had been tassels. It is a wonder of wonders that the poor crentures on them were not flung off, but fortunately we had taken particular pains with their lashings, and as for knocks, they could stand them like so many bears.

In the course of twenty minutes we must have traveled twice as many miles, perfectly helpicas to arrest our mad rush because, Edmund said, the atomic reaction partly refused to work, and he could not rise as he had expected to do. We were pitched hither and thither, and were sprawling on the floor more than half the time. The noise was awful, and nobody tried to speak after Edmund had shouted his single communication about the power, which would have filled us with dismay if we had had leisure to think.

The shutters were open, and suddenly I saw through one of the windows a sight which I thought must surely be my last. The car had been eweeping through a dense cloud of boiling vapors, and these had without warning split open before my eyes—and there, almost in contact with the car, was a glittering precipice of solid ice, gleaming with wicked blue mashes, and we were rushing upon it as if shot out of a cannon!

The next instant came a terrific shock, which I thought must have crushed the car like an eggshell, and down we fell—down and down!

The blow against the precipice of ice was not as severe as it had seemed to me, and which I thought must have crushed the car like an eggshell, and down we fell—down and down!

The blow against the precipice of ice was not as severe as it had seemed to me, and the car was not smashed; but the fall was terrible! There was only one thing which saved us from destruction. At the base of the mighty cliff an immense deposit of snow had collected, and into this we plunged.

Fortunately the stout glass windows were not broken, and after we had struggled to our feet Edmund managed to open the door. Before emerging he bade us put on our furs, but even with them we found the cold outside all but unendurable. Yet the natives paid no attention to it. Not one of them was seriously hurt, although they were firmly attached to the sleds, and unable to undo their fastenings. We let them loose, and then began seriously to examine the situation.

Above us towered the vertical precipice disappearing in the whirling clouds, and the wind drove square against with the roar of Niagara. The air was filled with snow and disappearing in the whiring clouds, and the wind drove square against with the roar of Niagara. The air was filled with snow and ice dust, and at intervals we could not see objects three feet away from our noses.

We got to work at once, Juba aiding us a little under Edmund's direction, and soon we had the sleds out of the tangle and properly attached. Then we replaced the natives on their zeats, and entered the car. Edmund began to fumble with his apparatus.

"You notice," he said, "that this wind is variable, and there lies four chance. When the blasts weaken, the air springs back from the face of the cliff and then whirls round to the right. I've no doubt that there is a passage in that direction through which the wind finds its way behind this icy mountain, and if we can get there, too, we shall undoubtedly find at least partial shelter. I'm going to take advantage of the first Jull."

It worked out just as he he redicted. As the wind surged back after a reticularly vicious rush, we cut loose and went sailing up into it rushing past the gittering wall

It worked out just as he redicted. As the wind surged back after reticularly vicious rush, we cut loose and went sailing up, into it, rushing past the glittering wall so swiftly that it made our heads swim. In two or three minutes we rounded a corner, and then found ourselves in a kind of atmospheric eddy.

"Now for it!" shouted Edmund. "Hang on!"

"Now for it!" shouted Edmund. "Hang on!"

He touched a knob, and instantly we rose with immense speed. We must have shot up a couple of thousand feet, when the wind, coming over the top of the icy barrier we had just flanked, caught us again, and swept us off on a horizontal course. Then, suddenly, the air cleared all around about, as if a magic broom had swept away the clouds.

We were in the heart of the Crystal mountains! They towered round us on every side, and stretched away in interminable ranges of shining pinnacles. Such shapes! Such colors! Such flashing and blazing of gigantic rainbows and prisms! There were mountains that looked to my amazed eyes as loftly as Mont Blanc, and as massive, every solid mile of which was composed of crystalline ice, refracting and reflecting the sunbeams with iridescent splendor. For now we could begin to see a part of the orb of the sun itself, prodigious in size, and poised on the edge of the gem-glittering horizon, where the jeweled summits split its beams into a thousand haloes.

There was one mighty peak, still ahead of us; but toward which we were rushed sidewise by the wind, which surpassed all the others in marvelousness. Even Edmund was for a moment speechless with astonishment at this wildly magnificent sight. But presently he spoke, very calmly, though what he said changed our amasement to terror.

"The trouble with the apparatus is very serious. I am anable to make the car rise higher. It will no longer renet against an obstacle. We are entirely at the mercy of the wind. If it carries us against that glittering devil no power under heaven can save us."

On we rushed, still borne sidewise, so that the spectacle was burned into our eyes, as, with the fascinstion of impending death, we gazed helpless out of the window. Now we were upon it! Instinctively I threw myself hackward; but the blow did not come. Instead there was a wild rush of ice crystals sweeping the thick glass. "Look!" shouted Edmund. "We are safe! The compacted air formed a buffer."

He had hardly finished speaking when the crisis came. We did just touch a projecting ridge, but the wind, howling past it, carried us in an instant round the obstruction. On we rushed, still borne sidewise, so that

Presently it was manifest that we were

Presently it was manifest that we were rapidly sinking.

"What's the matter?" I cried. "We seem to be going down."

"So we are," he replied quietly, "and I fear that we shall not go up again very soon. The power is failing all the time. It will be pretty hard to have to stop indefinitely in this frightful place, but I am afraid that is our destiny."

Lost and helpless in these mountains of ice and this world of gloom and storm! The thought was too terible to be entertained. The car descended until-at last it rested upon the snow in a deep valley, where we were protected from the wind. In this profound depression a kind of twilight prevailed, for the sun, which we had glimpsed when we were on the level of the peaks, was at least thirty degrees below our present horizon. We all get out of the car and unlocsed the natives.

Following Edmund's directions we took a lot of extra furs from the car, and constructed a kind of tent under which the

Following Edmund's directions we took a lot of extra furs from the car, and constructed a kind of tent, under which the natives could huddle on the sleds.

Inside the car we soon had things organized very much as they were during our voyage from the carth. We read talked, and smoked to our hearts' content, almost forgetting the icy mountains that towered over us, and the howling tempest which, with hardly an intermission, tore through the cloud-choked air a thousand or two thousand feet above our heads.

But while we strove to kill the time and sand feet above our heads.

But while we strove to kill the time and banish thoughts of our actual situation, Edmund sat apart much of the time absorbed in thought, and we respected his privacy, knowing that our only chance of escape lay in him. One day he called out:

in him. One day he called out:

"It's all right. I've found the solution, but we shall have to be patient for a while longer."

"What is it?" we asked cagerly.

"Peter," he said, turning to me, "you know what libration means; well, it's libration that is going to save us. As Venus travels round the sun she turns just once on he axis in making a complete circuit, the consequence being, as you already know, that she has one side on which the sun never rises while the other half is in perpetual daylight. But, since her orbit is not a perfect circle, she travels a little faster than the average during about half of her year and a little slower during the other half, but, at the same time, her rotation on her axis never varies. This produces the phenomenon that is called libration, the result of which is that, along the border between the day and night hemispheres there is a narrow strip where the sun rises and sets once in each of her years, which are about two hundred gnd twenty-five of our days in length. Within this strip the sun shines continuously for about sixteen weeks, gradually rising during eight weeks and sinking during the following eight weeks and sinking during the following eight weeks and sinking during the following eight. Then, during the next sixteen weeks, the strip lies in unceasing night.

"Now the kind fates have willed that we should fall within this lucky strip. The sun is now just beginning to rise on the part of the strip where we are, and it will get higher for several weeks to come. The result will be that a great melting of ice and snow will occur here, and in this deep valley a river will form, flowing off toward the sunward hemisphere, exactly where we want to go. I shall float down with it until we are out of the labyrinth."

"But how will you manage to float?" I saked.

"The car, being airtight will float like a "The car, being airtight will float like."

how will you manage to float?" I The car, being airtight, will float like a

"The car, being airtight, will float like a buoy."

"It turned out just as he had predicted. Every twenty-four hours we saw, with thankful hearts, that the sun had perceptibly risen. Soon we no longer had any use for furs, or for artificial heat. At the same time, the melting of the ice began. It formed, in fact, s new danger.

We were at the bottom of the trough of the valley, near its head. It wound away before us, turning out of sight beyond an ice bulwark. Streams were soon pouring down from the heights all around, and uniting, they formed a little torrent, which flowed swiftly over the smooth, hard ice. Edmund now completed his plan.

"I'll take Juba in the car with us," he said.

"Pil take Juba in the car with us," he said.
"There's just room for him. As for the others, we'll fasten the sleds on each side of the car, which will be buoyant enough to float them, and they'll have to take their chances outside."

them, and they'll have to take their chances outside."

We made the final arrangements while the little torrent was swelling to a river. Before it became too broad and deep we managed to place the car across the center of its course, the sleds forming outriders. Then all took their places and waited. Higher and higher rose the waters, while the avalanches, confinually increasing in size and number, thundered down the heights, and vast cateracts leaped and poured from the precipices.

There came a sudden wave, forced onward by a great slide of tee, which lifted car and sleds on its crest, and away we went! The car proved more buoyant than I believed possible. The sleds, fastened on each side, tended to give it extra stability.

The increasing force of the current sent us spinning down the valley with accelerated speed. We swept round the nearest ice peak on the left, and as we passed under its projecting buttresses a fearful roar above informed us that an avalanche of unexampled magnitude had been unchained. The uproar grew worse, and the ice came plunging down faster and faster, accompanied with a deluge of water from the heights above. Suddenly the car seemed to be lifted from the water, and then it fell back again and was submerged, so that we were buried in night. Slowly we rose to the surface, and Edmund springing to a window, shouted:

"They're gone! Heaven have pity on them"—

In spite of their fastenings the water had swept ever living soul from the sled on the left. We rushed to the other window. It was the same story there—the sled on that side was also empty.

CHAP, IV-Children of the Sun,

But there is no use in prolonging the story of that awful ride. It seemed to us to last for days though, in fact, the worst of it was over within twelve hours. The tumbling stream gradually broadened out as it left the region of the high mountains, and then we found ourselves in a district covered with icy hills of no great elevation.

After a long time the now broad river widened yet more until it became a great lake, or bay. Here vast fields of ice floated, and the water was not muddy, as it would have been if it had passed over sail, but of crystal purity and wonderfully blue in places where shafts of sunlight penetrated to great depths—for now the sun was high above the horizon ahead, and shining in an almost clear sky. Presently we began to notice the wind again. It came fitfully, first from one quarter and then another, rapidly increasing until, at times, it rose into a tempest. It lifted the water in huge combing waves, but the car rode them like a lifeboat.

When a change came at last, it was as sudden as the dropping of a curtain. The clouds broke away, a soft light filled the atmosphere, the waves ceased to break and rolled in long, undulations, and a marvelous deme appeared overhead.

That dome, at its first dramatic appearance, was one of the most astonishing things that we saw in the whole course of our adventures. It was not a cerulean vault like that, which covers the earth in halcyen weather, but an indescribably soft, pinkishgray concavity that seemed nearer than the sky and yet farther than the clouds. Here and there, far heneath it, but still atta wast elevation, floated delicate gaugy curtains, tinted like sheets of mother-of-pearl. The sun was no longer visible, but the air was filled with a delicious luminousness, which bathed the eyes as if it had ben an ethercal liquid.

Below each window was a steel ledge, broad enough to stand on, with convenient filled with a delicious luminousness, which hathed the eyes as if it had ben an ethereal liquid.

Below each window was a steel ledge, broad enough to stand on, with convenient hold-fasts for the hands. These had evidently been prepared for some such contingency, and Edmund, throwing open the windows, invited us to go outside. We gladly accepted the invitation, and all, except Jubs, issued into the open air. The temperature was that of an early spring day, and the air was splendidly fresh and stimulating.

"There," said Edmund, pointing to the dome, "is the inside of the shell of cloud whose exterior, gleaming in the sunshine, baffles our astronomers in their efforts to see the surface of Venus. I believe that we shall find the whole of this hemisphere covered by it. It is a shield for the inhabitants against the fervore of an unsetting sun. Its presence prevents their real world from being seen from outside."

We continued for a long time to gaze at the great dome, until suddenly Jack, who had gone to the other side of the car, called out to us:

gone to the other side of the car, called out to us:

"Come here and tell me what this is."

We hurried to his side and were astonished to see a number of glittering objects which appeared to be floating in the atmosphere. They were arranged in an almost straight row, at an elevation of perhaps two thousand feet, and were apparently about throe miles away. After a few moments of silence, Edmund said, in his quiet way:

"Those are airships. An exploring expedition, I shouldn't wonder. You know already how dense the atmosphere of Venus is. It follows that balloons, and all sorts of machines for aerial navigation, can float much more easily here than over the earth. I was prepared to find the inhabitants of Venus skilled in such things, and I'm not surprised by what we see."

"But," I said, "you spoke of an exploring expedition. How in the world do you make that out?"

"It seems perfectly natural to me," replied Edmund. "Remember the two sides of the

"It seems perfectly natural to me," replied Edmund. "Remember the two sides of the planet, so wonderfully different from one another. If we on the earth are so curious about the poles of our planet, don't you think that the inhabitants of Venus should be at least equally curious concerning a whole hemisphere of their world, which differs from the half on which they live?"

"That does seem reasonable," I assented. The strange objects in the air approached with great rapidity. They were cetrainly air ships, and I was greatly interested in the observation that they seemed to be constructed somewhat upon the principles upon which our inventors were then working on the earth. But they were neither airplanes nor balloons. They bore a resemblance to mechanical birds, and seemed to be sustained and forced ahead by a wing-like action.

Soon two of the air ships were close at hand. And now we perceived, for the first time, the beings that they carried. Our surprise at the sight was evan greater than that which we had experienced upon meeting the inhabitants of the dark hemisphere. The two air ships were apparently in charge of real human beings!

In the midst of the strange apparatus, which evidently fulfilled the functions of wings for the air ships, we saw decks, spacious enough to contain twenty persons, and

In the midst of the strange apparatus, which evidently fulfilled the functions of wings for the air ships, we saw decks, spacious enough to contain twenty persons, and surmounted with deck houses, and along the railings inclosing the decks. Were gathered the crews, among whom we believed that we could recognize their officers. The two vessels had approached within a hundred yards before being suddenly arrested. Then they settled gracefully down upon the water, where they floated like swans.

One would have said that we had met a yacthing party, composed of tall, well-formed, light-complexioned, yellow-haired Englishmen, the pick of their race. At a distance their dress alone appeared strange, though it, too, might easily be imitated on the earth. It bore some semblance, in general effect, to the draperies of a Greek statue.

We could read their astonishment in their gesticulations. Slowly the car and the nearer of the two air ships drifted closer together. When we were within less than fifty yards of one another, Jack suddenly called out:

"A woman! By Jo, it's Venus herself!"

fifty yards of one another, Jack suddenly called out:

"A woman! By Jo, it's Venus herself!"

His excited voice rang like a rattle of muskery in the heavy air, and the beings on the airship started back in alarm. But they were not faint-hearted, and the airship did not take flight. The momentary commotion was quickly quieted, and our visitors continued their inspection. All of us immediately recognized the personage whom Jack had singled out. Even at the distance of a hundred feet we could see that she was very beautiful. Her complexion was light, with a flame upen the cheeks; her hair a chestnut blond; and her large, round eyes were sapphire blue, and seemed to radiate a light of their own.

The Dauntless Lysander

Gosh, it was harder than he'd thought, Lysander gulped. "I thought perhaps you might be interested in a—a residence in Los Angeles."

OR a second the great man stared at him, a gaze so searching that the poor boy felt the very laundry marks on his collar writhe in embarrassment. "What collar writhe in embarrassment. "What are you up to, anyway?" said the cold, gray eyes in contemptuous speculation.
Then with a suddenly cunning half smile:
"I might be at that. What's your proposition?" And he exchanged a glance with his wife and Phyllis, who had withdrawn

"Just a minute," said the latter. He turned to his wife and daughter, and spoke in a low voice something to which they listened with a really extraordinary in-

Lysander ventured now to steal a glance at his goddess, and he saw her with enchanted eyes in a "cloudy ra-diance." Adorable Phyllis! She had remembered him. How wonderfully things were going. Of course, he could hardly expect Papa Willard to present him at once, unless-. But no, as the great man turned back to Lysander, mother and daughter walking away leisurely in the other direction.

"Now," said Mr. Willard, "I'll look at your house. And we'll go in my car." There seemed an emphasis on the "my."

"Thank you, sir." Lysander's elation suddenly shriveled in spite of himself, for there was something in the great man's tone, in his manner, that did not chord with this dizzying falling in with a strange young man's request. There was no am ble sympathy with young ambition on als grim face, no interest in the errand, rather a sort of watchfulness, a now just try something attitude that was squelching, to say the least.

Lysander tried to think it was just sides this first conquest was nothing short of a miracle, and he must make the most of it. Why, it was the chance of his life. A great big thing to be thus piloting J. F. Willard; to be riding in the magnificent one within a week. In his wildest dreams he had not conceived more magic than this! Perhaps it was a dream. To assuage the doubt he sur-ptitiously pinched himself.

Having given their destination to the chauffeur, he proceeded to improve each shining moment with bright conversation. Or attempted to do so, but Mr. Willard began to ask questions, snappy questions about where he had lived and how long had he been in California, and how came he in this business, and some others that seemed—well, sort of sly. Lysander, gulping occasionally, answered truthfully, although it really seemed that the more simple and straightforward his answers the less stock Mr. Willard took in them! Ly-sander couldn't understand it, but Mr. Willard acted as if he were trying to con-ceal that he didn't believe a word Lysander said!

They were met by the courteous agent, who showed them over the property doing all the talking, to Lysander's relief, and treating him, too, quite tactfully. Mr. Willard acted decently (Lysander had a queer feeling that he might say something terrible any minute), and responded properly enough to the agent's efforts to interest him. But he ended the interview pretty shortly by saying that he had decided to have a country place if he bought at all. The agent assured him that his firm had magnificent places on its lists, and Mr. Willard said well, he'd see, as he climbed back into the car.

The agent shook hands with Lysander; "Much obliged, anyway, Mr. Pratt, for bringing Mr. Willard around."
"Quite welcome, I'm sure," said Lysander. The magnificent one rolled away and he again essayed to be entertaining. Mr. "Hum," and "Is that so?"

They reached the hotel, alighted-but Mr. Willard did not ask the dauntless one up to meet his daughter. He looked Ly-sander steadily in the eve. "Ab, thank you for your interest, Mr.— er—Pratt. Will you give me your address? In case I wish to communicate with you?"

"O, certainly, Mr. Willard," Lysander fumbled for his carefully prepared cards. "Thank you so much. I—I—if I can be of any use to you, I hope you-"

"Thanks," drawled Willard, and for the first time his shrewd eyes showed a hint of amusement and—of perplexity.

YSANDER walked away. He had done it. He had made the acquaintance of the king, and beheld the princess once more. And she remembered him. had won to her side. The next time he would be presented to her. Had not the old man-that is, the king-asked for his address, intimated that he would communicate with him? Would he have done that, said that, if he had not been favor-ably impressed? Of course, he wouldn't. Phyllis, I come. I come. Gosh, she was levely, O, lovely. There were at least two reels of this, and while his teeming brain dreamed them, his feet reeled off several aimless miles around and about, until he was brought suddenly back to earth by a sign which said, "Alfred Til-bury Plumber."

Mr. Tillbury, wearing a grin on his dirty face, was just entering the shop and greeted Lysander with a cheery: "Hello, Pratt! Come in and look us over."

Lysander preferred his dreams, but accepted the invitation by following the plumber into the dusty little shop, where he listened to a monologue on Mr. Tillbury's future plans. Little he guessed with whom Lysander had hobnobbed that day! Tillbury was going to take over a garage—had a chance to buy in good. Once Lysander would have been interested in a garage, but say, from now on he'd probably be associated with J. F. Willard! -

"What are you going to do?" Tillbury finally asked.

"O, real estate, I guess," returned Lysander lightly.

"Real estate, eh?" repeated Mr. Tillbury thoughtfully. "All right if you're a big bug, but kinda uncertain for the little on I'd say. Thought maybe you might like workin' in the garage."

"Why, thanaks. I admit I'm a pretty good mechanic, but—I tell you, Tillbury, I've got something pretty big in view just new."

"That so? Well, all right. Want to go over and look around anyway?"

Lysander submitted and accompanied the friendly plumber to the new garage, which was just around the corner. It look ed a pretty good proposition—he was in-terested in spite of himself. But perhaps the important thing was that he and Tillbury did not get home until dinner time.

Lysander saw at once that something had happened to Amy. She was pale, her eyes were wide a a child's who has been frightened, and she started from lits of abstraction when spoken to. It was some-thing plainly not pleasant—and every once while she looked at him in a hurt, questioning way . . .

That puzzled him so much that he almost neglected to conjure the vision of Phyllis on the porch after dinner. Amy joined him soon.

"Mr. Pratt may I speak to you a mo-

Amy's eyes searched him almost pit-usly. "He—he was a detective," she eously. whispered.

Lysander stared. "A detective! Why, what did he want?"

"He wanted to know all about you. How long you'd been here and what you'd been doing and—and what sort of fellow you seemed to be."

"Me? Why, what—! Why, I haven't done anything. Why, that's funny!"

H IS obviously sincere astonishment seemed to relieve Amy, and a little color came back to her cheeks. "Haven't you any idea?"

"Not the remotest."

"He even went out and looked at your

And went up and looked in your room. And asked if any men came to see you or if you stayed out nights. You don't know you're sure you don't know—" There was pleading in her low voice. Then suddenly: "O, there he is! He's come

Sure enough, a thick-set little man was coming up the walk, and Lysander, as he turned to face him, looked into steady, shrewd eyes, a good deal like Mr. Willard's a face rather hard but by no disagreeable.

"Mr. Pratt?" began the caller in a business-like manner.

"My name's McKay. See the yo lady's tipped you off. Let's sit down." "Certainly." Lysander was surpr See the young "Certainly." Lysander was surprised and curious, but not frightened?

McKay cooly inspected him. here my young friend, you put up a great front, but we've got you dead to rights. Why not just hand it over and save a lot of commotion?"

Lysander grinned. "Is this a joke? Hand what over?" But his throat was dry. "Mr. Willard's chain," replied McKay in a steely voice. Lysander's smile went out like a light switched off. He met McKay's eyes squarely, but no words

"I'n just give it to you straight," that gentleman went on easily. "Miss Willard recognized you today as the fellow in the garage the day the chain was stolen. suppose you snipped it off in the cute lit-tle way you fellows have. Ly inder merely continued to look at There was a numbness about the boy's heart. They—they thought he was a thief. Perhaps nothing ever again hurts in quite the same way as the first blow life gives to young faith in the dream. His thought of Phyllis—and her thought of him. All his fine plans. This was how she had remembered him.

"Better make a clean breast of it," Mc-Kay advised not unkindly for a moment. "I'm here to give you the chance. If you hand over the chain, the Willards won't make a fuss. They don't want publicity."

"I haven't got the chain, Mr. McKay," said Lyaander quietly. "I've never seen it. Because the Willards happened to see me the day the chain was lost is hardly proof that I—have it."

"Well, there's something funny about your actions, young man. Of course, we haven't had time to check you up good since Mr. Willard phoned us this afternoon, but—you can't get away with it. Why not get yourself off easy? Now, here, you're only a kid, and you don't so tough. Suppose I give you till look so tough. tomorrow to think it over "A hundred years to think it over won't make any difference.

"O, yes, it will," McKay rose. "No use tryin' to beat it, you get me? Well, goodnight, Mr. Pratt. See you tomorrow." He walked down the steps, rather jauntily, down the walk.

YSANDER sat motionless. They had L nothing really on which to hold him.

They just suspected and were trying to bluff him. But it wasn't that.

"Lysander!" The wistful voice of Amy at the door made him jump. He rose quickly and went in to her as she switched on the economical little lamp that made the darkness of the shabby hall visible. He could see that his face frightened her without knowing how boyishly stricken it was. She kept raising trembing hands to her throat and letting them fall again, while her eyes searched him and pleaded with him—and caressed him.

"Has he gone?" she breathed. He nod-stopped. She turned to close the front door carefully, and waited a moment, listening with her head on one side. The house was quiet, save for a faint tap-click of Miss Burd's typewriter away off upstairs. Outside a mocking bird trilled a few notes in the great pepper tree. Amy held Lysander's eyes with hers; the breathed quickly and her lips trem-oled. She put her hand to the breast of her gingham dress and drew out—some-thing that ran and glittered merrily through her shaking fingers like sun-touched fountain spray—a diamond and platinum chain, value ten thousand dollars. How long they stood staring at each ther, with the thing like a marvelous serpent dangling between them, then Lysan-der wet his lips and a hoarse whisper issued: "Where'd—you get it?"

"You know," her lips formed. "No, no. No, I don't!" Hysteria shook his cautious tones. "I don't know, I tell you." Not knowing why, he took her by the shoulders and held her so. "Tell me,"

She did not try to release herself, proforehead.

"It was in your car. Didn't you-put it there?"

. His amazement was so genuine. 'Of course not! How could it have got

She told him then, in eager, panting whispers how, after McKay had looked the car over and gone, she, moved by some inexplicable impulse, had gone out and looked at it, too. She had felt—terribly upset—and had sat down on a box that was there in the shed to—to think it all over. And sitting there, just at the right angle maybe, she saw something hanging underneath the car someway, and she had crawled under and pulled it out-and it was this. Al dirty, but she had washed it and—and—that's all.

How it came there no one would ever exactly know, since Henrietta was dumb. All that Lysander could think of was that the chain had become unfastened and fallen on one of Henrietta's wheels, and been thrown up in some way when it turned, to lodge on some little projection of her ancient frame. He got this feverishly to Amy.

"You believe me, Amy, don't you? You know I didn't know anything about it. You believe me, don't you?"

"I do believe you, Lysander."

SOLEMNLY his quivering young lips touched her forehead. Happy man, who when all the world doubts has one left whose faith is untouched.

But now! This costly linked mischief must be returned, and its return could be taken only by those blind ones as a confession of guilt.

"I'll go with you, Lysander," Amy decided at last. "We'll just tell them how it was, and they'll have to believe us!" "I couldn't let you do that. I couldn't let you be mixed in it."

'I'm sure they'd believe me, and it would help straighten it out better.

"No," Lysander shook his head. "But it's mighty sweet of you. Besides, your mother wouldn't let you."

"That's a good idea," said Miss Amy. "We'll just tell her all about it and take her along with us!"

Committee Committee

"Well," said Mr. Willard after it all, and his eyes had softened a good deal when they met Amy's spirited yet pleading ones, "it's a queer thing, but I guess I'll have to believe you, Miss Amy. And to make it right, I'm going to ask this young man's pardon and urge him always to justify your fine faith in him." So after all he wasn't such a bad old king.

And then, just to finish it off, while the three of them waited for an elevator, the motherly woman and the pretty, eager young girl, and the solemn, boyish fellow, there emerged from the elevator the prin-cess herself!—Miss Phyllis, all dolled up like a million dollars and leaving behind her an atmosphere of much self-satisfac-tion and the fragrance of an expensive perfume.

Lysander felt a light touch-Amy had slipped her strong brown little hand through his arm. Darling, stanch little pal—Amy. What if the dream didn't come true? Perhaps life is holding for you just around the corner the sweeter gift that is for you.

Lysander swallowed hard. "You know," he said in a voice he tried to make very casual, "I believe I'll go in with Alfred Tillbury after all. Seems a nice fellow. and I think I'd like it better than-real

·A Boy's Letter

HE CONSTITUTION is in receipt of the following very interesting letter from Master Thomas Greville, a 10 year-old boy of Highlands, N. C.

This is quite a remarkable document from a boy of that tender age and what he has to say of life in that beautiful mountain community will be read with interest:

"Editor Constitution: Please find room in your paper for this article.

"In your paper recently there was an article entitled 'Taking the Movies to the Mountains.'

"We can look at the pictures comfortably seated in opera chairs, with furnace heat. We have an orchestra composed of a piano and three violins. The piano is played by a good planist who has graduated in music from Wesleyan college and has written some music of her own. The moving pictures are run by H. W. Sloane, a member of the board of education. They are three times a week, but are only in the summer when Mr. Sloane is here. Also we have state and county educational pictures all the year round.

"Our schoolhouse has three school rooms, three cloak rooms, two halls and an office downstairs. One of the halls contains two drinking fountains. Upstairs we have a auditorium, a stage, two dressing rooms and a soup kitchen.

"Downstairs there are general stores, two meat markets, a drug store, a restaurant and a barber shop. There are six boarding houses and four churches.

"We have a good government road from Walhalla, S. C., and twenty automobiles were reported in town the other day when tourists came in. There is not a baby in town who has not seen about twenty (if not more) automobiles. About a thousand visitors come here each sum-mer. At least two thousand dollars' worth of stuff comes here to individuals from mail order houses each year.

"Highlands is the highest incorporated town above sea level east of the Rocky mountains. It has an altitude of 3,823 feet above sea level.

"Highlands is a very fine town and we are proud of it.

The Latest Things In Dresses for Little Belles

HE recent increase in the number of fricks for children that are built on lines requiring a blouse beneath, makes the subject of blouses and waist of interest to every mother.

There are two types of dresses that call for these blouseguimpes—both very popular this spring. One is made with plaited skirt and bretelle suspenders from the waistline. A new lot recently displayed showed this type in large black and white check, the suspenders being held by steel buckles; the blouse with its round collar, was made of red crepe de chine. Others showed large red plaid with black waist.

The other style of dress demanding the waist or blouse are those taking their origin from the woman's sleeveless dresses of last year. These are built on much the same jumper lines, but with the openings at the front and under the arms greatly exaggerated, so that the frock por-tion becomes little more than suspender tion becomes little more than suspender straps in its upper part.

To wear with a solid blue skirt a blouse of bold blue checked gingham is shown. The "V" neckline with small collar, the short sleeve and the front pleat was marked by plaitings of self material. Other types of smart gingham waist for school show the gingham collar and cuffs school show the gingham collar and cuffs bound in white batiste, Many of the models show long sleeves.

MANY little straight line dresses for school are made of check gingham with bits of smocking and the collars and cuffs bound with white, but many of these little belies are choosing the small stripes in combination with plain colors. On all dresses in the two to six-year size, bloomers of the fabric are attached, how ever these bloomers are full, with rub-ber in bottom and do not show below the The straight trouser and smock of last season are entirely out of date.

"Kiltie" dresses are much in demand. They are shown in red, khaki and navy, made with check gingham waists and lit tle plaited skirts of solid color. The solid color being used as a strap trimming or the waist to give the jumper effect.

It is said that quite a little is being done with tones of brown and that the plain brown chambray especially is well thought of, some trimmed in yellow or-gandie embroidered in tiny wool flowers.

The newest party frocks for tiny folks are shown of fine white net or point de spree. They are trimmed with tucks and ruffles and can be worn over pink or white slips. The more festive ones have tiny pink rosebuds and narrow loops of

Many of these little net dresses are shown in simple models with hand em-broidery in delicate designs. The little pink rosebuds that belong on this type of frock are placed in clusters on the skirt. Attractive dotted swisses are seen and dotted dimities in rather bright colors are made with collars and ouffs of thin cr-gandy, through which the round designs of the colored fabric plainly show.

THE widely known "Peter Pan" cloth which has been taken up largely by the children is now shown in the print designs, flowers, dots, checks and stripes comprising the patterns. Sateens in chintz designs are being shown and are particularly adaptable for children's dresses. The chintz pattern in small flower effects express the freshness of youth, tone which is so much wanted in a child's

In all models, the general impression, of course, is of daintiness; embroideries are exquisite, laces and drawn work sim-ple and tiny pin tucks and French knots much in evidence, while colors when used are the most delicate pastels. Set in three-quarters and long, shirred with tiny cuffs or edging prevail to straight models are replacing the yoke in favor, attractive collars are seen on models intended for boys, and embroidered, tucked and scalloped bottoms are specially good,

Navy Serge Frock

A frock of navy serge for a young girl has a generous amount of cross stitch sun-broidery in yellow wool. Another tan frock was embroidered in dark brown.

The Weekly Market Basket

Delectable Dishes for the Table in Midwinter

R modern rapid transportal has so upset the market seasons that unless one studies the conditions for oneself, one is apt to eat summer vegetables in midwinter.

Beef and mutton are said to be "in season" during the winter months. Roasting chickens and fowls are also good. Oysters are at their best. Celery is in full season, also chickory and

If possible select vegetables that are in season in the locality in which you live. Your pocketbook will not be so slim at the end of the month your table will be more sightly and your health better.

Carrots, turnips, parsnips, beets, cabbage, kale, onlons sweet and white potatoes are all in full season.

These winter vegetables, if well rooked and daintify served, are as appetizing and sightly as summer vegetables

Turnip cups filled with dice of well cooked carrots, surrounded by cream sauce, are certainly pretty and palatable. Add to the list of every-day starchy foods pumpkin, old peas, beans, tentils and homtny and you will soon be relieved of the necessity of buying canned goods. For stewing purchase small, fat oysters, good in quality, but not expensive; for frying purchase the large ones; do not use the same kind of oysters for both dishes. For roasting purchase a year-old chicken; for stewing purchase a fowl.

ABBAGE, if it cost a dollar a head, C would be one of the most popular winter vegetables. Cooked in boiling salted water, uncovered, for twenty minutes, it is white and as delicate as cauliflower; it may be served with butter or with cream sauce. When boiled with meat it loses its odor and flavor and is coarse and unsightly. When well bleached cabbage makes one of the best of the winter salads, it must be shaved very fine, soaked in cold water for an hour or two, drained, dried and dressed with French

Small quanities of cooked carrets, tur nips and beets may be cut into neat pieces, mixed with celery, and dressed with French dressing to serve with cold meats. White and yellow turnips, cut into blocks and cooked at the boiling point in massited water, are clear and transparent; drain, cover with cream sauce, and serve at once. If they are cooked in saited water and covered they are coarse, unpalatable and difficult of digestion.

Rolled Steak.

Purchase a thin slice from the round ar flank steak; trim it neatly, dust lightly with sait and pepper, then thicken with bread crumbs and a little chopped parsley. Roll the steak so that in carving you will cut across the grain; tie it in three places. Put a sliced onion, one carrot, a whole clove and a bay leaf in a baking pan, put the steak on top, add a pint of hot water, cover the pan, and co in a moderate oven one or one and a half hours. Lift the pan, brown the steak quickly and dish it, removing the strings; make a brown sauce, using the water from the pan.

Dutch Turkey.

long, cleave it in several places. Make a dressing of one-half loaf of stale bread one minced onion, two stalks celery, one egg, well beaten and enough hot water to dampen. Stir well and season with salt, pepper and little celery salts if desired.

Put four tablespoons butter in frying pan and fry the mixture very slowly until Make into a loaf. and roll up (ribs on outside). Place in baking pan with one cup of hot water, cook long and slowly, basting frequently.

Codfish Rabbit.

Melt one tablespoon of butter in the upper part of the double boiler, blend with it one tablespoon cornstarch. Add one cup of hot milk, gradually, and season with a dash of paprika. Cook until smooth, then add three-quarters cup of grated cheese and a cup of codfish previously soaked with cold water and then flaked. As soon as the cheese is melted, stir one well-beaten egg in quickly, add one tablespoon of lemon juice and serve Onion Farci.

P EEL large, white onlons, remove a portion of the inside and cook them in boiling water for five minutes. Drain.

Stuff with equal parts of soft stale bread crumbs and any kind of cold chopped meat, mixed and seasoned with salt, pepper, chopped parsley and a suggestion of Worcestershire sauce. Moisten with hot water, stock or gravy. Place a strip one-half inch wide of red or green pepper around the cut edge and bake until onions

Cheese Cream Toast.

Melt one and one-half tablespoons but-ter and one and one-half tablespoons flour and when bubbling pour on one and one-half cups scalded milk, stirring briskly until the sauce is smooth salt, pepper and paprika. Add two-thirds cup of mild grated cheese and cook un-til the cheese is melted. Dip six slices of toast in the sauce, place in a hot dish and pour the cream sauce over them. This is a very nourishing lunckeen or Sunday night dish.

A New Potato Croquette.

PARE, boil and mash eix or seven medium sized potatoes; add one tablespoon of butter, two-thirds cup hot milk, the beaten whites of two eggs and salt to taste. Cool slightly and shape in the to taste. Cool slightly and shape in the form of eggs. Scald one cup of milk and stir into it one tablespoon butter mixed with one tablespoon of flour. When cooked sufficiently add two cups of linely chopped chicken, one teaspoon of satt, one-half teaspoon pepper, one teaspoon onion juice, one tablespoon of lemon juice and two eggs well beaten. Cool. Cut petato eggs in halves, crosswise, remove a portion from the center of each and fill with the chicken mixture. Press together, egg, crumb them and fry in deep gether, egg, crumb them and fry in deep These croquettes are quite appropriate to serve at luncheons or parties where a meat course is served, taking the place of the meat.

Sweet Potato Toast.

To two cups of hot mashed sweet po tatoes add four tablespoons of sugar, two teaspoons butter, one and one-half cups milk, one-half teaspoon salt and two eggs: Mix to a smooth paste. Cut stale bread into very thin slices and spread with the paste; lay close together in a well buttered pan; sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and bake in a hot oven until they begin to turn a golden brown.

P tree and core large, well-shaped apples Full the ples. Fill the center with marshmallows and bake in a sauce made by cooking one-quarter pound of marshmallows, one-quarter cup of confectioners' sugar and ene-half cup of boiling water, in a double boiler until smooth. When done roll in shreaded cocoanut and serve cold. Place a marshmallow upon top of Popcorn Marguerites.

Make a syrup by using one cup of sugar and one tablespoon of vinegar and when it threads pour it upon the whites of two eggs. Beat until thick, then stir in three cups of fresh popcorn. Spread waters thickly with the mixture and bake in a moderate oven. (Nice to serve with a cup of chocolate or tea.)

Shaker Cookies

HESE are often mistaken for nut cookies, so rich is the flavor of the catmenl and the raisins. Cream one cup of shortening and one cup of brown sugar. Add two well-beaten eggs. Beat. Add seven-eighths of cup milk and two cups flour mixed with one-half teaspoon salt. Use one teaspoon of salt if unsalted shortening is used. Add three-quarters of a teaspoon of soda dissolved in a little water, one cup of chopped raisins and by spoonful on a cooky sheet and bake in a hot oven. Allow room for cookies to spread. No baking powder is required, as the raisins, if chopped, supply the acid to react with the soda.

Orange Surprise.

UT oranges in halves. Remove juice and pulp, leaving the skins in good condition. For a pint of juice, soften half a package of gelatine in one-half cup of cold water and dissolve it be believed. cup of boiling water. sugar and the juice of half a lemon. orange juice and strain. Mold the jelly in teacups, wet with cold water. Fill to the required height to fill the orange skins. Decorate jelly with almonds, can-died cherries and cooked raisins. When ready to serve remove from cups to skins. Cover with meringue and brown delicately in a very hot oven.

A Baking Hint,

When baking very juicy pies sift a layer of fine bread crumbs over the lower crust before putting in the fruit. This crust before putting in the fruit. This will insure a crisp lower crust, while the crumbs can be neither seen nor tasted.

Bessie R. Murphy Attentions a Guest Should Receive And Give

HOSTESS must be definite in the dates of her invitation. Instead of merely asking a guest to spend the week-end, she should mention the day she would like her to come and the day of her departure.

It is thoughtful to mention and special diversions that are to occupy the time so that the guest may take tals into account in packing her trunk or bug. If dates are not specified in an invitation the guest in accepting, should mention them, leaving them subject to alteration by the hostess.

Some provision should be made for meeting a guest at the train. It is pleas-ant for the hostess to do this in person, especially if the guests are won

The guest room should be attractively and simply furnished. The main thing is to have good lighting and a comfortable bed; of source fresh towels, a new cake of soap, clean and empty bureau drawers

If you keep a maid, she is asked to look after your guest's comfort and offer to help her unpack. The hostess herself, if there is no maid, should offer her help to a guest in dressing for dinner. While the family and guests are at dinner, the maid opens the beds for the night and lays out the nightgown and slippers.

The ideal guest replies promptly to an invitation, arrives when she says she will and leaves when the time is up.

SHE accommodates herself to the customs of the household where she is visiting, observing carefully the hours of meals. As far as possible she should eat what is set before her. She should not keep her hostess up at night but should gracefully propose retiring at a conven-

Above all she should keep exquisite order in the guest room, picking up her clothes neatly, keeping the dressing table in order and not spilling lotions and powders on floor or furniture.

A guest should be thoughtful in ber treatment of her hostess' servants and make them no more extra labor than necessary. It pleases the cook mightily to hear that some special dish has been appreciated. Upon leaving most guests give to the servants who have particularly waited upon them tips of different amounts.

If a hostess has no servants, it is courteous to offer to help in various house-hold ways. If a guest sees, however, that she will please her hostess more by keep-ing her hands off the household machinery, she must be content to acquiesce. It est as rude to force aid on a host as it is to neglect to offer it.

A good visitor knows her own mind. When two plans for amusement are proposed she selects one or the other of them. Not to do so or to reply "Oh, I don't care," shows an indifference which is very uncomfortable for the hostess.

A visitor is not at liberty to correct the children of her hostess and it is not good form to give unsought advice to a hostess on any subject connected with running her home—from biscuits to baby

While a guest is visiting it is quite correct and indeed very nice for her to do something for the entertainment of her hostess. She may, for instance take Ler to luncheon or a matinee. A guest who is staying for any length of time with a friend in the city has many opportunities to return favors and show appreciation of hospitality. Here and There in the Byways of Fashion

PRONS for ladies' maids are PRONS for ladies' maids are so bewitchingly pretty these days that one wishes one might act as lady's maid to somebody. There are some made of very heavy but good quality cotton net, with hems double, and the straps likewise double. With them go scalloped collar and cuff sets, also made of the double net. And sometimes a little cap also of the double thickness of net. The mesh is big.

Black silk is fashioned into a lovely negligee, voluminous and soft. It is trimmed with thick, gray swansdown.

Coat linings are fascinating this year. Well, they usually are, for that matter. When it is a year of plain silk or satin linings, they are fascinating because of their very smoothness and nice cut and tailoring. When it is a year of brightly figured linings they are fascinating just because they are so bright and gay. This year there are various sorts of linings. Some are figured. Some are plain. And a good many of the capes have interesting trimmings on the lining. That is, there will be a band of force of the same are plain. ured ribbon marking the juncture of the lining with the turned-under sec-tion of the front and lower edge of the cape. This shows, of course, when the cape is thrown back. With such a trimming there is a plain lining, naturally. Other linings, especially those of evening cloaks and capes, are puffed and shirred, and some of them are trimmed with ostrich.

Ostrich, by the way, in all colors and widths, may be bought by the yard in the shops. It may be used at home for trimming boudoir caps and negligees, even if one does not ven-ture to make anything more impor-

Lovely lingerie of the sheerest hatiste, made all by hand-and embroddered with the daintiest sort of stitches, is always sought after by some women, who far prefer it to that of silk. It is of course, white. This year one may buy it made by French or Belgian workers.

The shops are getting the right sort of brassiere to go with the low-topped corset. There was a good deal of corset. There was a good deal of complaint on the part of women because of the hiatus that appears when they stretch out, inadvertently, between the lower edge of the brassiere and the top edge of the corset. Some resorted to safety pins to fasten the two irretrievably together. Some just tried to remember not to throw their shoulders hack Burnow. there are brassieres really made to go with these low corsets that stay where they belong, and keep a smooth line the juncture of the two garments

A loose belt about the hips with some sort of hanging ends at each side is a good decorative note. One such belt on a black frock is faced with bright blue, and has silk irridescent blue crystal beads embroidered on the ends of the girdle. These hold the ends—four of them, for they hand in a pair at each side—down to the sides of the skirt.

Symmetry in Skirt and Blouse

THE great charm in period costumes lies in the relationship between each element in the picture. Painting, architecture and the minor arts of weaving, pottery and jewelry are all in the same key, and consequently every scene in life has the nice balance of artistic conception. When we come to details of costumes of the past, the relation to the separate parts was even more delicate; the hat was designed with relation to the functions of life or the dignity of social position, and in relation to footwear also. The outer-garments blended with and justified the costumes intended for formal occasions. It was not so much that people in other ages had better taste than we have in our times, but that culture developing through longer periods of time and the opportunity to mellow.

There must be some method of associating all the different types of garments in order to create the desired effect. The success of a blouse may depend on getting a skirt in harmony both in line and in color. The proper relationship between these two garments is obvious. In some ways, the connection between separate skirts and blouses is closer than the relationship between suits and blouses. In the latter, little more than harmony or contrast in color is desirable with perhaps some thought as to the average length. But in the relationship between the separate skirt and the blouse the problems of modeling require the most careful consideration, if ohe would get an artistic effect.

What About a Playroom In Your House for Children

ERHAPS you may have heard of farseeing engaged people who, when making plans for the house that is to be their first home together, deliber-ately mark a certain foom in the house the nursery and confer with the architect to make sure that this important room has the right expo-sure and ventilation. However, most people no children never build houses, if such things as children ever did come into the world, and this is unfortunate because as a usual thing people do not have enough money to build houses at the same time that they are rearing children. It is often the they are rearing children. It is often the houses built when the children were adults with no especial regard to the demands and short-comings of children that later serve as the home place for the next generation of children. And so it goes. Meantime the mothers and fathers of children usually have rather lengthy suggestions as to how they would build their houses over again.

A playroom is almost essential for the com-fort of elders as well as of children. One young mother of several children insists that if she had a cottage or apartment of but four rooms, one of those would be designed and furnished as a playroom.

The old-fashioned idea of a playroom was that it should be some otherwise useless room, in the attic or a wfig of the house where toys could be stored and children relegated on rainy days. And, doubtless, children spent many a hilarious hour in those old-fashioned playrooms. But the playroom of today has a more definite place in the training of the child. It is a place where he is taught the principles of order and neatness, a place where he has his own books and pictures—in short, it is pretty nearly what the day nursery is in well-regulated English homes, only that there is less evidence of the nursery maid about it.

OW if you were planning a six or seven or eight-room house for your small family that included a child or so, where would you have the playroom?

You would show wisdom in putting it on the first

Tou would show wisdom in putting it on the ground floor of the house. In the first place, the ground floor is warmer. More-over, the housewife that has to do much of her own work is below stairs three-quarters or more of her waking hours, and most Ameri-can children have a way of demanding and

System in Getting Things Upstairs and Downstairs

HE dweller in an apartment imagines there is an advan-tage in a house, and to satisfy the craving for two stories the apartment builders have made duplex apartments. Meantime the house dweller longs for the simplifications of an apartment and the house build-er has hit upon bungalows. Needless er has hit upon bungalows. Needless to say the duplex apartment is not an article that comes at bargain prices and the bungalow is usually an expensive proposition. That is, it is much more economical to build six rooms with three on one floor and three above than to build six rooms on the level with twice the excavation and twice the roofing that would be necessary were they built in two layers.

Whatever your personal prejudices whatever your personal prejudices and preferences, true it is that the woman who keeps house on two floors has to spend time running up and down stairs that makes definite inroads on her time budget and strength. Moreover, there is always the problem of carrying things upstairs and down; there is always an accumulation of things waiting to go up stairs and waiting to come down.

If you live all on one floor the chances are that you go right into your room when you return from a walk or call and put your hat, gloves and other outdoor dress accessories in their proper place. If you live on two floors you doubtless take your things off downstairs and leave them to take up when you go. Thus out-door apparel, articles of work, freshly laundered clothes, children's toys, etc., accumulate to be taken up, and upstairs there is the collection of clothes to be washed, books to be 10placed in the shelves, dishes, waste paper and cleaning paraphernalia that all must be carried downstairs.

Your problem may be simplified by a laundry chute and a dumb waiter. if you figured the interest on the amount of money needed to put these conveniences in a house with the total in time saving and strength conserving that they would mean when installed, you would realize that they were well worth while, but still houses manage to be built without them.

I N large railway terminals there are endless stairways or escalators in the baggage checking departmentsthat carry in their claws an endless succession of bags and parcels to an upper story to be stored. Sometimes the arrangement is reversed and they are carried down by these devices to taken to the train level below.

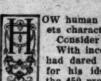

What a convenience such an escalator running beside the flight of stairs your house would be, especially if it had an automatic device for gently throwing oif its load when it reached the floor above! Tired children who beg to be carried could be sent up-stairs along with the basket of fresh laundry, packages of new clothes and toys that had worked their way down-stairs during the course of the day.

But for those of us who have no dumb waiter and no laundry chute, it is possible to establish a system that will make this problem of taking things upstairs and down simpler. It your stairs ascend from a hall or if there is a passageway near the stairs the matter is simplified. Then you should keep a hamper or basket of a size that can be carried without great difficulty. In this basket all articles that must be taken unstairs should be laid. There should be enother basket above stairs, in which articles are put that need to be carried downstairs. There should be a ried downstairs. There should be a rule that the first adult member of the household going upstairs should carry the basket up or the first one coming down should carry the other down. Always the baskets should be down. Always the paskets appaid be emptied as soon as possible so that the empty basket will be available to serve the reverse purpose of carrying things downstairs or up again.

their mothers. They like to be within earshot. If the playroom is just off earshot. If the playroom is just off the living room or even off the kitch-en there is the advantage of knowing that they can be heard but not seen, which is often preferable to the other arangement of having them seen but not heard. You can tell by what you hear how their play is progressing and yet their toys and other paraphernalia can be kept well out of sight and out from under foot.

Picture Puzzle, "The Lion and the Mouse"---By Dan Rudolph

A Bible Talk

OW human are the Bible's greatow human are the Bible's greatests characters!

Consider Elijah,
With incomparable conrage, he had dared upbraid Israel's king for his idolatry. Pacing alone the 450 prophets of Baal, he had proven their god false in the greatest prayer test recorded in history.
As punishment for leading the ten tribes of Israel from the worship of the Almighty of Israel from the worship of the Almighty God, he had put those priests of Baal to the sword.

But when word came to him from Ahab's idolatrous queen Jezebel that she would have his life on the morrow, he forgot his faith in the Almighty and fled in dismay—ran into the wilderness and, in despair, sat down to rest under a juniper tree. There he came to himself long enough to feel the sting of remorse. He was as in mied of his cowardice, and, recognizing als weakness, wanted to die.

It was an act dramatically inconsistent with the rest of Elijah's life—yet how human! In considering it, it must be remembered that he was not only frighten-ed but weary. He had undergone a severe trial. His contest of faith with the fol-lowers of Baal had been long drawn cut, and then he had run before Ahab for eighteen miles to the gates of Jezreel. The flesh is sometimes weak when the heart is willing. And he was temporarily without anything to do.

But God did not desert Elijah, just as He does not desert us when we flee to the wilderness in our weak moments; He had other tasks not yet disclosed.

An angel awakened the prophet and put food before him. After he was refreshed he slept again, and again food was provided for him. In his restored strength he traveled forty days and forty nights unto Horeb, the mount of God. There he lodged in a cave, still fearful of the writh of Jezebel. And there the word of the Lord came unto him in the inquiry, "What dost thou here, Elljah?"

Poor Elijal.! How natural was his reand to the average man it seems a reason-

He explained that he had been jealous for the Lord God of Hosts and for the children of Israel, and this was no more than the truth. He felt that he was alone and that his life was in danger. He had sadants alone of from exaltation to despair. No wones he torget so the faithful. There were 7,000 who had not bowed the knee to Baal, plam peorle who had not been to exalt in victory or so cast down in defeat. They are the ones who steady the boat in the storm.

The Lord summoned Elijah again, sent him upon the mount and taught him a great lesson that has been of unspeak able value to all the generations since that

Elijah represented rugged strength; the strong arm of the Lord was made manifest through him. But now he was taught that God was not always in the wind, nor in the earthquake, nor in the fire, but that

In the earthquake, nor in the fire, but that the was also in the still small voice. Then the Lord gave Flijah other work to do, and with new tasks his strength returned.

I am not sure that we will find many lessons of more practical importance than this; Keen busy. As "Satan finds some mischief still for lide hands to do." so human weekness besets us most between our tasks. As sins abound in the nights that separate the days of toil, so our periods of discouragement and doubt lurk in the dark intervals between our seasons of activity.

When Elijah fled from the presence of Alab's queen he had finished the work that God had put upon him and no call had come to new acts of consecration, but just as soon as he heard the funfliar voice of the Heavenly Father sending him on a new mission be went boldly about the Father's business.

And so we come to another great Bible legge-Neboth's vineward. A wonder-ful picture. A covetous king and the ful picture. A covetous king and the Man of God meet grain—this time in a murdered man's vinevard.

Ahab coveted the vinevard of Nabothnot an unusual thing. Many a man has conceived the idea of rounding out his garden by the nurchase of adicining land. And Ahab proceeded in quite a natural unobjectionable way,

The Tenth Commandment

THE BIBLE'S GREATEST STORY OF COVETOUSNESS—TEXT OF TODAY'S BIBLE TALK BY MR. BRYAN.

(I. Kings 21:7-10, 16-20)

And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Isreal? arise and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry:

will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people:

And set two men, sous of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, Arise, go down to meet Ahab the king of Israel, which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.

And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saving, Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee; because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord.

BUT Ahab was provoked and, like a spoiled child, threw himself down upon his bed and sulked, refusing to eat.

It was not long before his conduct was reported to Jezebel and she hastened to inquire why he was sad. He frankly explained to her the grievous disappointment that he had suffered and then his wicked wife gave him a lesson in the exercise of authority. She hade him eat and he morry, assuring him that she would give him Nahoth's vineyard. Then she proceeded to frame a conspiracy against Nahoth's

Nabels.

Addressing the elders and nables who lived to his city, she ordered them to proclaim a fast and set Nabeth in the chief place. Them by her direction, two basemen, sone of Belial, were to be seated before Naboth with instructions to bring false witness against him.

The conspiracy was carried out to the letter. The fast was arranged, Naboth was put in the place of honor, the false witnesses appeared, made their lying accusations, and Naboth was carried out of the city and stoned to death.

Then these willing accomplices in the murder of Naboth reported their success to Jezebel and she immediately conveyed the glad news to the king. He rose up and furried down to the vineyard to take possession of it. When he arrived he met Elijah for the third time, the same Tishbite who warned him of the coming drought and then commanded him to summon the prophets of Baal to Mount Carmet for the prayer test. The prophet appeared before him at the command of the Almighty, Elijah was himself again—he was God's spokesman.

The scene lends itself to the arrist, and

The scene lends itself to the artist, and it is not strange that it has been put upon the canvas. The staging is perfect.

There is the coveted garden; the former owner being dead, it became the property. of the king according to a law, that Jeze-bel doubtless understood, giving the land to the king when the owner was put to death for blasphemy. In the midst of the garden-stands the king, wicked enough to enjoy the fruits of a victory bought by a murder that he was too cowardly to com-mit. Before him stands Elijah, stern voice of an offended God. of an offended God.

Ahab does not wait for Elijah to speak; his conscience accuses him before the science that, as Shakespeare says, makes cowards of us all.

THE outstanding lesson of our talk is the sin of covetonsness. Possibly nowhere else is the importance of the Tenth Commandment so emphasized. It comes last, but it is by no means least in importance. It is so intimately connected with all the others relating to man's dealing with his fellow man that its observance is of the very first importance.

In this case, covetousness led to false witness, to murder, and to theft. Covetousness would be better understood if the visible masks under which it operates did not divert attention from it. When one steals, attention is centered open the act, although covetousness is conceased behind it. When one commits murder it is often due to covetousness, although the covetousness is hidden. False witness, too is often but the covetousness is hidden. too, is often but the outward manifesta-

It is the beginning of evil, and the beginning is the thing that needs most to be watched. Sin is not difficult to deal with if taken at its inception; it becomes a serious problem when it ripens into Christ gave the only sure core. taught that the heart should be full of love to God—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." No vacuum must be left in the heart for evil thoughts to [9]. When the heart is full it overflows, and the overflowing heart is the symbol of a Christian life. Christian life.

But there is a second commandment that follows naturally after that which Christ declared to be the first and great commandment, namely, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." That is the real cure for covetousness; or, rather, it prevents the birth of covetousness

All kinds of wrongdoing follow in the wake of covetousness. When one starts out to do evil he never knows what crime he must commit to carry out his purpose; one evil step leads to another until he finds that "the wages of sin is death." On the other hand, no one knows what unexpected pleasures he may havite when he travels the path of righteousness.

Obedience to the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," would have saved Ahab the experiences he had at Mount Carmel. Obedience to the last would have saved him in the vineyard.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

not been possible to complete any capital ships. These ships would be very useful to show the French flag and spread the national influence in the world. France's naval strength was greatly reduced, especially as compared with other nations. For no aggressive desires of any kind, France did not want to lose this opportunity for repairing her losses.

The result was a postponement of the question of disposal, which was a virtual victory of the principle of distribution as supported by the French.

But the problem was strangely taken out of the hands of the peace conference and settled in another way. On June 21 the Germans who still manned the ships at Scapa Flow, by concerted action, themselves opened the seacocks and sunk most of their own ships in the harbor. The disposal of those that remained was a matter of little concern. Lloyd George offered them all to France to restrain Clemenceau from making this and other incidents the occasion for a new resort to force. They might make good France's naval war losses, but all prospect was destroyed of considerably adding to her naval armament. Thus it was the act of the Germans in scuttling their ships, rather than the decisions of the peace conference, that prevented a considerable increase, rather than a limitation of naval armaments on the part of the allied powers. But Germany disarmed on sea, although not as co pletely as on land. The treaty allows her ships and six light cruisers, with twelve destroyers and twelve torpedo boats. These have obviously no connection with the maintenance of internal order, and can be intended only for national de-fense. Furthermore, Germany is allowed, under Article 196, to retain all works of coast defenses not bearing the character of offensive bases or menacing to the pas-sage into the Baltic. When Lansing opposed the destruction of these, Lloyd George supported his argument of Ger-many's right to defend herself.

Why did not the British exert themselves to strip Germany on the naval side as the French did on the land side? It is probable that they did not want to lay her defenseless to France by sea. They no longer feared Germany on the water. The instruments of naval warfare cannot be so readily improvised as those of land warfare. England could feel sure of her superiority on her element, but she had done security by land. The fleet left to Germany was no menace to France, but, together with the coast defenses, might restrain her from dominating Germany by sea. If an was to do that, it must be England. If any one

But, if little actual progress was made at the peace con'erence in the matter of imiting naval armament, the door was kept open for future investigation and discussion as in the case of limitation of land armament, by the provision of Articles 8 specific mention of naval armament in Ar icts 8 is the final clause providing for publicity ("exchange of full and frank infor-mation as to the scale of their armaments") regarding naval as well as military programs, yet it must be understood that the eventual limitation is intended to apply to havies as well as armies, and the permanent commission appointed at the flowe meeting of the council in May, 1920, was discussed to make inquiries regarding both anval and land armament. It is possible under the present constitution of the league to go forward with the discussion and investigation of the whole problem of sea power, which was not directly discussions. ments") regarding naval as well as millsea power, which was not directly discussed, much less seided, at Paris.

Where Girls Go When They Run Away

Quick Action One of Essentials in Locating the Missing Girl—The Baffling Case of Dorothy Arnold.

THIS, the fourth of a series of articles by Mrs. Humiston, tells of the long and ineffective search often made for girls who have left home, and gives some opportune advice to parents whose daughters have run away. Next Sunday's article by Mrs. Humiston will be on the subject, "What Is Wrong With the American Home?"

By Grace Humiston

EAR Mrs; Humiston: Has anybody been looking for me in the last twenty years, do you know? . . ." know? . .

I could hardly believe my eyes as I read the letter before me. The date line bore a Philadelphia address. It was signed by a woman whose name I cannot give here, but whom, since then, I have had the great good fortune to restore to her loving parents.

Perhaps you think it was foolish of this missing 'girl," then grown to womanhood, to write to me, a stranger, and ask such a question. But if you had seen the strange reconciliations which I have seen, and witnessed the unbelievable restorations of missing daughters to the arms of loving mothers which almost daily occur in this country of ours, you would not

Not a day passes but someone is seeking someone else. The search for the missing girls is an endless search. You might think that one little unaccounted for girl, twenty years absent from her humble home and presembly lost in a great city of five million, would be forgotten. But not so long as there is a thing like mother love in existence. I telegraphed the Philadelphia woman that very morning:

very morning;
"Yes. Someone has been looking for you. Come at once."

you. Come at once."

She came, and in my office in New York she poured out her heart to me of her twenty years of wretched, aching loneliness spent since she had quarreled with her mother and ran away from their small town New England home. It was drawing near to Christmas, and when she had read about my work, a great impulse had seized her to find her home. All else in her life she threw aside, except the task of getting back to her mother.

I have always said that ninety-nine out of a hundred missing girls would return home if they had the least encouragement home if they had the least encouragement or reasonable excuse for doing so without injury to their pride. This was the most wonderful exemplification of the homing instinct in human beings that I have ever experienced. And it is refreshing to kn 'v, too, that in this case the mother and father of the missing "girl" were still searching. Through the dusty files of one of the great national societies for the protection of missing girls I was able to find record of the family's whereabouts and arranage a Christmas celebration that sent them all into the seventh heaven.

WHY in the world are not more missing girls found?" is the question which I those interested in this growing problem of American society.

The answer is: For lack of painstak-ing investigation. Missing girls have to be ferreted out. The great mystery cases which have absorbed the public in the last which have absorbed the public in the last decade—the Dorothy Arnold and Ruth Cruger disappearances, for instances—have been complicated detective problems with such a bewildering number of clews that months were required to get to the point where a solution seemed in sight.

The Dorothy Arnold case of which I shall treat later, is still a great mystery. The New York, police force was baffied for two months on the Cruger case and even after another two months had failed to find a solution, when the mystery was cleared up finally by the discovery of the girl's body under a cellar in the house of

. It is the unfortunate truth that too often the attitude of the official police of the United States is: The girl was, bad to begin with.

It is because the search for the missing girl is so often conducted upon the basis of this utterly false generality that so many cases, in my opinion, are annually dropped from the rolls of the police department as "unsolved" and the hopes of so many parents crushed to the ground. I do not think as many as 10 per cent of all the missing girls in the country are anything but innocent, clean girls in the beginning. It is after their running away, not before, that many of them fall victims to temptations.

So certain were the police in the Cruger case that the missing girl was a "girl gone wrong," so confident were they that she wrong," so confident were they that she would be found in some maternity hospital or the hands of some midwife, that they made official distribution of 65,000 copies of the girl's laundry marks to midwives throughout the United States.

Those who had investigated the case thoroughly soon reached the conclusion that no such premise could be reasonably assumed. They took the viewpoint disput.

assumed. They took the viewpoint diametrically opposed to that of the official police, maintaining that the girl was innocent and good until proved bad. It was the logical pursuit of clews upon this basis that led finally to the discovery of the shocking crime which lay behind Ruth Cruger's disappearance, a discovery which brought to the poor victim's name a degree was the course of misses. served martyrdom for the cause of missing girls everywhere. For as a result the country became sharply aroused and the work of recovering missing contact from lives of vice and saume received an mu-petus which is still potent in America.

There are certain things which must be done in the search for a missing girl to which those closest to the girl ordinarily would give little heed. The following suggestions have proved of value in the solution of thousands of cases upon which I have been consulted by grieving parents from all parts of the country:

- 1. Get several good photographs of
- 2. Determine the cause of her leaving home; was her departure voluntary or not?
- 3. Get an accurate description of the clothing she wore when leaving, but more important than that, the ex-tra clothing she took with her. (Nine out of ten missing girls change their clothes soon after leaving their home

- Find out the name and address of the girl's favorite aunt, uncle or cousin, or of her girl friend closest to her, in whom she would most prob-ably confide. Many clews are obtain-ed through such sources of informa-
- 5. Find out the girl's personal ambitions; is she movie struck or does she want to be an opera singer, sten-ographer, modiste or business pro-prietor.
 - 6. Get samples of her handwriting.

These are the essentials which the police or private investigators should have as quickly as possible if they are to handle the case effectively the case effectively and recover the girl before harm comes to her. Quick action in these few important details and widespread publicity given out at once will do mere to return the missing girl to her home than any other thing. It is delay at the beginning, when the beginning, when time is precious, that has crused the loss of many girls. You may spend many thousands of dollars a few weeks later and spend them all in vain. Immeand prompt public-ity might even have saved the tragically famous Dorothy Ar-

U NDOUR TE DLY the strangest missing girl case ever known is that of Dorothy Arnoid. It was not as if family poverty made thorough search impossible, for the father of the missing girl, in his extremity, finally offered his fortune for the recovery of his daughter. The whole case reflects the urgent need of quick initial action.

One bright December morning Dorothy Arnold, after a chat with her mother, at breakfast, descended the steps of ber father's beautiful house on East 79th street, New York, and made her way down to the Fifth avenue shopping district, all eagerness over the prospect of buying a dress which she was to wear at a party the forthcoming week.

At noon she visited the candy department of Park & Tilford's, where she se-lected some of her favorite "mixed choco-lates" and charged them to her father's account. An hour and a half later she appeared at Breatano's book store, at Fifth avenue and 27th street, where she

She was last seen at the door of this shop by a clerk and seemed to be debat-ing whether she should turn uptown or downtown. She might have been swal-lowed by an unseen monster, for no trace has ever been discovered of Dorothy Ar-

Elaborate measures were vainly employed in seeking Dorothy Arnold. A general alarm was sent to the police of every city in the world; every hospital record in the country was searched; every ferry line, steamship line, and railroad was canvassed by trained men; every New York ward was searched by some member of the family; the morgue was watched, and men used to the business were asked to men used to the business were asked to keep their eyes on the rivers and harbors about the city; rewards were offered; ad-vertisements were put in all the papers; private detectives were engaged who fol-lowed every possible clew.

But Doroty Arnold was lost-probably forever. Whether abe lives or not today is a question much discussed in legal cir-cles, but one upon which little real light has ever been shed.
